The large number of new subscribers added to the Herald's list is most gratifying to the publisher as an earnest of appreciation of his efforts to print a bigger and better newspaper.

Now that the sidewalk is completed, with a couple of exceptions, along the east side of 92nd street in Lents, those that traverse this thoroughfare are giving thanks accordingly. Good roads can only be appreciated by many people by practical exemplification.

By perusal of the files of the Herald in years gone by we learn that the first newspaper published in Lents was dated fifteen years ago, and its name was "Oregon Grape Juice." Our Smithy wonders if it had much of a "kick"? Mickey says: "Course it did; kause it 'kicked the bucket!'"

"The early bird catches the worm" is most applicable to those planting advertisements of their wares for the holiday trade. Space in the Herald will soon be limited and rates will soon go up along with the rapidly increasing list of subscribers. "A word to the wise" should be sufficient.

Herbert Hoover declares in the Literary Digest that there are three and one-half million children in Europe without food or clothing. He makes an appeal for aid that should receive material response from every person possibly able to contribute their mite in assisting this sad condition of affairs. No matter what the fault of the parents, innocent children should not be made to suffer the evil consequences, regardless of the scriptural quotation that "The sins of the parents shall be visited upon the children," etc., to which the writer never took kindly. That there should be a slogan, "One day's pay for every wage earner; one day's profit for every one else," suggested by the Telegram, is most appropriate to the occasion.

SPORT IS GENERAL

East may be east, all right enough, and west may be west; but there is no east nor west, nor any north and south, when it comes to sports. Here is the one cosmopolitan thing of all the world. Sport knows neither east nor west, nor south nor north. It is general. Sport has a universal technique and language. Go to the far East and one finds the same old interest in baseball, boxing, racing, football and other sports that he finds in the far West. Minnesota talks the same sport language as Texas. There may be, here and there, some idiomatic differences of expression, but the man from California knows boxing and baseball the same way as the New Yorker does. It was my privilege to be in California recently, says a writer in Milwaukee Sentinel. There was a boxing show carded for one particular evening. The man of the house in which we were guests did not know of my interest in the game. Of course I knew nothing of his. Finally, by some turn of conversation, our mutual liking for boxing was exposed and immediately we entered upon a new and much more cordial relationship. Also we attended the bout, and while the arrangements and conduct of the affair were not at all comparable with the methods employed here, the same old crowd manifestations were apparent. Followers of the fight talked and acted in the old familiar way and there was nothing new, novel nor strange about the proceedings. Yes, sport is general. It is the same here, there and everywhere; the same yesterday, today and forever.

Early estimates from the census bureau are said to place the total rural population of the country at not more than 48 or 49 per cent of the whole. The drift of population to the cities is the outstanding feature of ten years. The shade of Jefferson, looking at the growing urban population and the growing unrest, will perhaps permit itself an ironical, though kindly, smile. For it was Jefferson's belief that contentment was possible only if the inhabitants of a nation lived in the country and owned land. Jefferson hardly allowed in his thought for the "industrial revolution," as economists and historians call it, and he was not fond of cities. But time may yet prove that his view of this matter, as of so many others, was philosophically sound.

Five million houses are needed in the United States, which is a serious situation if it is true. The home is the cornerstone of the nation. A corner stone with such a corner lacking is somewhat shaky in the way of a support. The situation needs all the resources and ingenuity of the times to get busy on its remedy.

There is abundance of coal at the pit loading stations; there are thousands of idle coal cars, and there is a coal famine in most of the large industrial centers. Certain brains do not seem to be functioning. They should be made to function or be replaced with more efficient brains.

A woman who serves a manufacturing concern in the capacity of purchasing agent attributes her success to a college training. However, there are married men who will tell you that their wives can put in a pretty good day at it on nothing more than a high-school course.

A woman of ninety, who has just died in a Pennsylvania town, had a unique record. She was the mother of 15 children, saw five generations of her family, and had 131 descendants, several of whom served in three wars. Such a woman deserves a monument from a grateful country.

The ultimate consumer has learned to regard money as no object. He rejoices like a patriot and a philosopher every time an industrial problem is solved by the simple process of putting him to some additional expense.

A Boston dietetist says fried chicken is not to be compared to broiled chicken. Certainly not, says Houston Post. How are you going to compare the superlative with the groveling things of this world?

General Tomchevski is reported to be the man who has been leading the bolsheviks to their victories against Kolschak, Denikine and the Poles. His name is enough to strike terror to any heart.

A professor of Greek has been named minister of Greece. If linguistic skill is to be an essential in future diplomatic appointments, the man who goes to Peking will have earned the job.

Workmen in Berlin ousted the students in the famous university there, and in the fight which ensued, gas bombs were thrown, which is some comment on the result in Germany of the higher education on those who hadn't any of it.

A plot is suspected to replace ex-King Constantine of Greece on the throne. No matter how piteously the monarchs complain of the splendid isolation and trials of royalty, they cling to their thrones with the desperate hold of a drowning man on a straw.

A Zeppelin line of communication with America is said to be under contemplation. Of course it will be commercial, but in view of certain irritating recollections it might be as well to change its name. Even "blimp" would be preferable.

Whether there is to be a Russo-German trade alliance or not, it is important to bear in mind that for years the Germans have taken the trouble to find out what the Russians want to buy and to sell it to them in the form the Russians desire.

The cost of gasoline goes up in the same degree that the fluid grows weak for mileage purposes, as well as malodorous. "Gas" is not the only commodity which has increased as to cost without reference to quality.

An astrologer rises to remark that the world will come to an end next winter and we are hoping that, if this is the case the cataclysm will arrive before we are required to pay for filling the coal cellar.

A court has ruled that a man cannot rob his wife. Of course not; in the old days he couldn't locate the pocket in that ample skirt, and nowadays searching a handbag is a hopeless task.

A thorough discussion is developing the fact that almost every citizen favors a League of Nations provided it is precisely the kind of a League of Nations he approves of.

An expert writes that the only fault he finds with soft drinks is that they are so awfully soft they are hard to take.
