POINTED PARAGRAPHS

Auto Jacks should be jacked up.

Be in style; old clothes are now in fashion.

A Liberty bond may be down, but it's never out.

It's the big profiteer who should be jailed; not fined.

This country certainly is accumulating souvenir wars.

Nothing is surer than taxes and the fate of a Mexican president.

A man's old one is what you would call, we suppose, a friendly suit.

There is a famine in thread and that is what our last hope hung on.

China takes the stand that it's time for Japan to get out, not to talk about doing it.

Last year's straw hat seems determined to fight it out if it takes all summer!

It's hard to tell from one minute to the next who is the man of the hour in Mexico.

Doesn't a silk shirt look odd on the fellow who used to be seen around in his under one?

Woman is going to realize just what a wonderful creature she is before the campaign is over.

The habit of wearing old clothes is substantially contributing to comfort, if not appearance.

It is feared, also, that by the time of the resurrection there won't be anything left to come up.

Japan is exporting beans to this country which knows beans but not enough to raise enough.

What the old home farm apparently is a crop that will demand but six hours' attention a day.

A little healthy deflation for profiteers and they would be able to see conditions much as other men.

Good clothes are an asset. If you happen to wear them fewer folks will try to bump you off the sidewalk.

While Liberty bonds may bring low prices in the market, the trouble is not with the bonds, but with the market.

While prices are said to be falling, the wise consumer will still wear goggles to keep the sand out of his eyes.

We presume a farmer's wife finds it a hard matter to follow this talk about the farmer not having any help.

The assertion that Carranza was a suicide is merely part of the general tendency to pass responsibility along the line.

With producers contending that fall prices will be still higher, it looks as though the fight will have to go to a knockout.

Prices generally are coming down, but they fluctuate sufficiently to arouse a corresponding activity in the hearts of consumers.

Apropos of the falling prices, the old aphorism still stands that the people can do what they please if they will only please to do it.

Cheaper shoes are predicted for 1921, which is a long way off yet and many things may happen before the shoe slump arrives.

Maybe some are figuring that with what they save by wearing an old straw hat they may be able to buy a shovel of coal next fall.

France lost 57 per cent of its men under thirty-two years old, and still there is squabbling among others as to who it was won the war.

So frequent are the reports that the ex-czar is still alive that the allies may yet have to resort to the ouija board for definite information.

The man with a dandelion recipe isn't so much in danger of drinking himself out of house and home as he is of drinking out his front lawn.

That doctor who would tell his patients just what's the matter with them surely realizes that such a course would wipe out all our expensive diseases.

If it is true, as an economic expert states through a mass of figures, that 60 per cent of the price of flour is pure profiteering that point is clearer than it ever was.

One of the speakers at the recent police chief's convention urged the revival of the whipping block and the thumbscrews. Possibly wanted to carry the policy of the day to its extreme conclusion.

That 16-year sentence imposed by the French on a German officer for looting a chateau may serve as a precedent for German courts when they try all those on the allied list of accused.

FAMOUS FRUMPS IN HISTORY

Proof That Feminine Beauty Is Not Always Necessary for the Acquisition of Fame.

Beautiful women have their poets and their artists who do justice to their perfections, but some of the most famous women, either from their own or their husband's talents or position, have been frumps, says London Answers.

Mrs. Samuel Johnson was nearly twice the age of the celebrated sage of Fleet street; a widow, with several children as old as the man she married.

Lord Macaulay, in his famous essay, says: "To ordinary spectators the lady appeared to be a short, fat, coarse woman, painted half an inch thick, dressed in gaudy colors, and fond of exhibiting provincial airs and graces. But to Johnson his 'Titty,' as he called her, was the most beautiful, graceful and accomplished of her sex."

Caroline of Brunswick is the subject of one of Romney's most charming pictures. Yet here is a contemporary description of her from a diary printed many years after her death:

"Her eyes projected like those of the royal family. She made her head large by wearing an immense wig. She also painted her eyebrows, which gave her face a strange, fierce look. Her skin—and she showed a great deal—was very red. She wore very high-heeled shoes, so that she bent forward when she stood or walked. Her feet, and ankles were dreadful."

In the same diary appears a description of the famous Mme. de Stael, the most brilliant woman of her time:

"Her face was that of a black-moor attempted to be washed white. She wore a wig like a bunch of withered heather, and over that a turban, which looked as if it had been put on in the dark; a short neck, and shoulders rising so much behind that they almost amounted to a bump." Yet she had all the airs of a great beauty, and her salon was sought by all the wits and beaux.

George Eliot, whose centenary has lately been kept, was an exceedingly plain woman. It was said that she had a massive head, but as a rule a massive head does not look very elegant on a slim, straight-down sort of figure. Besides, she cared nothing about dress, and would probably have been better content if, like Rosa Bonheur, she could have got a special dispensation to "wear the trows."

Nevertheless, she was a most charming woman and a very good housewife. She used to pride herself that she could turn "Romola" to cookery.

That Bigge's Gold Shipment.

The Cunarder Aquitania arrived at New York the other day from Southampton, via Cherbourg, with the biggest shipment of gold ever carried on one steamship to this country.

The gold bullion was packed in 384 wooden boxes clamped with iron bands and the value estimated at 18½ million dollars in United States currency. On the voyage it was kept in the specie room under charge of the purser and the chief officer.

The entrance to the specie room was guarded the entire trip and was watched by members of the crew and the company's detectives from the pier until the gold was taken from the ship. The greater part of the specie goes to the Federal Reserve bank toward the payment of Great Britain's share of the Anglo-French loan due October 15.

The largest shipment of gold previously carried on one vessel was 134 million dollars, taken on the North German Lloyd liner Cedlie in August, 1914, for England, but brought back to America when Capt. Charles Pollock received warning by wireless that war was imminent.

Future of the Helicopter.

It is by no means certain that the successful air craft of the future will be the familiar airplane or even the dirigible balloon. Some aeronautic experts believe that the commercial aircraft of the future will be some form of helicopter. Within a few days a noted inventor, Peter Cooper Hewitt, has succeeded in building a helicopter which has actually risen from the ground and carried a man along with it and flown for a distance of 100 yards. Small models of this form have been made in the past both in America and Europe, but this is believed to be the first which has actually carried a passenger. The first railroad locomotives and steamboats, it will be recalled, were built on very different principles than the models which finally were adopted, and it is within the range of possibilities that the same will prove true of the flying craft. A wonderful opportunity for invention is thus opened to our ingenuity.—Boys' Life.

Put Technical Matters First.

In order that its student body may get more time to devote to technical matters, the faculty of California Institute of Technology has eliminated modern languages from the required curricula of the engineering classes. Students may take special courses in languages if they desire, but the hours that were formerly devoted to such subjects have been given to electricity and kindred matters. English and current topics will also be insisted on more than previously. The change was made after a consultation between the faculty and Frank R. Jewett, chief engineer of the Western Electric Company; John J. Carty, vice-president of the American Telephone and Telephone Company, and other prominent technical authorities.

If the Krupp are again making guns it indicates that they are glutted for punishment.

If the sugar speculators would announce their price of peace perhaps the public would surrender.

The old-clothes movement can hardly evoke any protests from tramps and bums, since there aren't any.

The proposed tax on doctors, lawyers and dentists seems funny until the tickled public sneezes down long enough to remember its echo in the bills.

Tomatoes for babies is the recommendation of a doctor, but for decorative purposes and making it seem like home, nothing will ever take the place of a stick of licorice.

The egg has figured as a symbol of advancement in more ways than in Christopher Columbus' object lesson in the possibilities of circumnavigation. It may yet set the pace for an H. C. L. reduction.

Save Fifty Years!

Suppose you were to set out to gather, by your own personal investigation, the wealth of farm knowledge that a single dollar will buy in a year's copies of

The COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

It would take you at least fifty years! And by the time you had your material together, nine-tenths of it would be obsolete — about as helpful in your farm business as the market prices of 1870.

A year of THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN represents the work of fifty trained investigators — each a recognized authority in his field, thoroughly informed on the latest methods that make for profit in farming. They give to THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN a vision as wide as the whole farm industry; they bring to it the collective experience of successful farmers the country over. Why not hire these fifty men to work for you? If you send me just one dollar bill or your check TODAY, I'll see that they report for duty on Thursday of next week, and serve you every week of the coming year.
