TEACHER.
The world moves, and though it still serves the cartoonist's turn to present "Teacher" in a light that is not at all a halo, teacher really doesn't answer to the old picture any more. The unromantic truth is that lots of teachers never did. We remember some five senior high school girls in a class of perhaps ten or twelve who were all going to be Latin teachers. A phenomenon like that calls for explanation. And the explanation was their Latin teacher. Those girls didn't want to teach Latin; they wanted to be like their Latin teacher. And she—she wasn't young, she wasn't—heaven forgive us for saying so—pretty, and she didn't pack a bag of tricks, says Milwaukee Journal. She had something worth while, though, didn't she? Call it character or personality or what you will, those girls wanted to be like her. And though none of them ever turned out a Latin teacher, every one of them was better for that teacher they had admired and loved. It is a mark to shoot at, isn't it?

England always prided herself upon her intimate relations with the Gulf stream. It was thought that the current left the sunny shores of distant lands to wrap the British Isles in a warm embrace, bringing with it not only a warmer atmosphere, but trophies in the form of shells from the tropics to ornament the beaches of Britain. The faith of the British in this direction is being shaken. Weather prophets who have been unable to account for the uncertain atmospheric conditions have been looking for a scapegoat for some months, and at last have pitched upon the Gulf stream as the delinquent. It is reported that ships have failed to find it in the ocean, and the west wind is no longer influenced by it. If the old and trusty friend, the Gulf stream, is going to join the strikers, then England indeed will feel this the unkindest cut of all.

Irrespective of opinions and sympathies in the case, all will rejoice that the Cork hunger strikers agreed to end their self-torture. The end aimed at has been achieved as far as possible by the sacrifices already made, and no further need exists to impress the world of the determination of Irishmen to fight to the bitter end for their own ideals, says Baltimore American. It is to be hoped this peculiar weapon of voluntary slow starvation will give way to other means of gaining the same end.

Aerial photography has entered the real estate field. Now, if you wish to buy a suburban residence, a downtown property or a country house, you can go to a broker's office and examine, probably with a reading glass, a most interesting and detailed aerial photograph of the neighborhood that you have in mind. The aerial picture very quickly brings the customer to a decision either to see the property or to look elsewhere. It saves time and the expense of long and often futile trips.

As nearly as can be estimated, the value of the output of all the factories in the world in the current year is: United States, $50,000,000,000, Europe as a whole approximately $50,000,000,000, and other manufacturing countries (chiefly Canada, Japan and India), $20,000,000,000, making a grand total at present prices of approximately $120,000,000,000 a year.

When they tell us that the corn production of the year is 3,200,000,000 bushels, it is proper to get the economic truth that the production is more important than price. The dollar is a fickle jade, but a bushel of corn will put so many pounds of fat on a hog or make so many ponies of bread, dollars or no dollars.

An expert says that human life was never so unsafe as it is today in the United States, and cites homicide figures to prove it. This increase may be merely coincidental with the increased sentiment for the abolition of capital punishment.

A French minister has refused to fight a twelfth duel on the ground that it is a foolish practice. Having gone unscathed through 11 of the harmless things, it is no wonder that he begins to be a bit bored.

The man who likes to write the love letters he shouldn't, might learn something from the League of Nations' conference at Geneva, which decides against minutes of the sessions. That's real foresight.

ON KEEPING A GOAT.
Now and again the goat butts into public attention as the benefactor of mankind, only to disappear after a few encomiums from the doctors and the food experts. Whether our methods of quantity production and centralization, our incompatibility of temper with the goat, our general habituation to the cow and cow's milk, are the reasons is not clear. At any rate, the goat finds small place in American society. Those who have seen goats domiciled in the crowded alleys of Europe, stabled comfortably in anything from a dry goods box to the spare bedroom, know that the goat is hardy and long-suffering, and two quarts of goat's milk a day give health and vigor to many a poor family. Though dwellers in flat buildings might encounter difficulties in raising goats, others who have no facilities to finance and operate a cow might easily undertake goat culture. The goat is non-tubercular and safe and the milk excels as food. The cream is emulsified and does not rise to the top. The expense of keeping a goat is trifling. In some circumstances the benefits are large.

The unrestricted wholesale slaughter of many thousands of birds in our own country has made it almost impossible in some places for farmers to grow fruit without careful spraying to kill off the swarms of destructive insects, especially when it is done at the proper time or in a proper manner, says Thrift Magazine. All such expensive undertakings go to show how disastrous it may prove for man to disturb the wonderful balance which we see in our natural surroundings. The beautiful birds with their song and cheer are an attractive addition to our lawn and garden. For this service we should not begrudge them the small amount of berries they eat, which indeed is small pay for the insects they destroy, and the good work they perform.

In a recent dispatch from Argentina it is stated that a bill has been introduced into the legislative body of that country which, if it becomes a law, will result in drafting a great many young men as farmers. It is stated in the dispatch that although compulsory military service is in force in Argentina, the young men who actually go into the service are selected by lot; also that there is some dissatisfaction because of exemptions. Under the measure which is now proposed, young men who do not go into the army or navy will be required to work on the farms of the country for a certain length of time. If this should be done, the agricultural production of Argentina will be considerably increased.

Alaska's loss of population in the last decade, amounting to nearly 15 per cent, was probably due in large part to the war. The flow of white emigration across the continent was completely checked and a place so far off in the extremities of our territorial system as Alaska inevitably suffered a reaction in its growth. The state of Washington was similarly affected. Alaska will pick up again when there are more people to go around.

A league of women voters has been formed representing all states, whose chief aim is to protect the motherhood and childhood of the nation, thus verifying the theory that women will always use their power in politics to further the interests of the home. The league also declares its intention to bring housewife methods into politics.

The announcement that the Dutch are fortifying their border to keep German Bolsheviks out is probably a gentle way of telling the world that having given asylum to one unwelcome visitor they are willing to risk their reputation for hospitality by barring others.

The Department of Agriculture urges farmers to breed skunks. "All that is required of the farmer is to be tactful when he meets them of an evening," says the circular. Even in the daytime it might pay to be polite and distant.

Argentina has started war on profiteers in the necessities of life, providing heavy fines and imprisonment. A touch on the pocket nerve and a taste of jail will do more than anything else to discourage the practice.

"Unless there is reforestation, there will be no newspapers 50 years hence," says the Syracuse Post Standard. Unless there is reforestation, there will be no forests, either, which will be nearly as unpleasant.

The fatal tendencies of the man who didn't know it was loaded are fast giving place to the motorist who is always going at a very slow rate of speed when he kills his victims.

Save Fifty Years!
Suppose you were to set out to gather; by your own personal investigation, the wealth of farm knowledge that a single dollar will buy in a year's copies of
The COUNTRY GENTLEMAN
It would take you at least fifty years! And by the time you had your material together, nine-tenths of it would be obsolete—about as helpful in your farm business as the market prices of 1870.
A year of THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN represents the work of fifty trained investigators—each a recognized authority in his field, thoroughly informed on the latest methods that make for profit in farming. They give to THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN a vision as wide as the whole farm industry; they bring to it the collective experience of successful farmers the country over.
Why not hire these fifty men to work for you? If you send me just one dollar bill or your check TODAY, I'll see that they report for duty on Thursday of next week; and serve you every week of the coming year.
