SANITY AND THE FOURTH

Some years ago the Fourth of July meant hours of wild rejoicing and cavorting. It also meant thousands of men, women and children maimed or killed in the inevitable premature explosions, fires and other accidents, to say nothing of the fatalities resulting from the everpresent fights.

Such was our manner of celebrating our independence in former years.

But today it is different. There is just as much patriotism and no less rejoicing, but it is done in a sane manner as becomes an enlightened and dignified people.

Next to the birth of Christ, the Fourth of July will always be the greatest day in history to us, but as time goes on we will learn to observe it in a manner befitting the birth of the greatest nation on earth.

Hail to America and the starry flag!
