"FATTY" ARBUCKLE

Cherlymen will say, "The wages of sin is death." They are right. The law is fixed.

Business men will say, "Too much money." They are right, too.

Take the given quantity, "Fatty" Arbuckle. It seems he didn't get beyond the fifth grade in school. His father doesn't appear to have been kind to him. "Fatty" was helped by others than his parents.

As a young man he didn't like work too well, it is said. He, moreover, was a funny fellow. He was fat, very fat. He had a comical expression.

He drifted onto the stage. He did light turns. Portland people say they remember him at the Star and the old Corvay's theater.

Then came the films. "Fatty" fitted in. His foolishness, where formerly it reaped little in the industrial world or little more on the stage, reaped hundreds of thousands and maybe millions. "Fatty" didn't have the moral stamina to withstand the prosperity.

He proves it now with his statement, "No more booze." Yes, "Fatty" is like most others. They reform only after the inexorable law has functioned.

The world has been unkind to "Fatty." It heaped riches upon him, a weak man, when the world's history proves that only the strong can survive with wealth.

OREGON

The quest for the origin of the name Oregon has been forwarded somewhat in recent years. The name as it now stands is first recorded so far as known, in Jonathan Carver's "Travels Through the Interior Parts of North America," published in 1778. Recent study establishes the fact that Carver got the name from a fellow soldier, Major Robert Rogers, who spelled the word Ouragan in one place and Ourigan in another. The new material in the case is summarized by T. C. Elliott in the current Quarterly of the Oregon Historical Society.

Major Rogers, who was a frontier fighter in the French and Indian war, being detailed to receive the surrender of the French forts as far west as Mackinac in 1760, conceived the idea of an exploring expedition to locate the northwest passage between the Atlantic and the Pacific which was greatly desired by seamen. With this end in view he presented two petitions to the English government, one in 1763 and the other in 1772; in the first he speaks of "the river called by the Indians Ouragan" and in the second he mentions "the great river Ourigan." Rogers loaned both his plans to Carver who was enabled to draw on them in preparing his own book.

This disposes of the question as to where Carver found the name Oregon, but it leaves the origin of the name still undetermined. Mr. Elliott offers the conjecture that Ouragan is the same as the French word "ouragan," meaning windstorm, hurricane or tornado; the great river of the west was "supposed to rise in western Minnesota and flow westward through Dakota and Montana, where blizzards in winter and tornadoes in summer are still known to prevail." The conjecture is more reasonable than others that have been put forward.

The judge requires a witness to take an oath before telling his story, but if he tears off a few during the operation he gets it in the neck.

ABOUT YOUR MERCHANT

(Tampa, Fla., Tribune)

The average buyer would do well to look with care at the offerings of the merchant who does not advertise.

No matter what claims that merchant may make concerning the facilities at his command for cutting profit to a point where the patron is the beneficiary, it is evident that he has not utilized the one biggest factor available in accomplishing that purpose.

Unless he advertises consistently, it is reasonable to assume that the merchant is not "turning over" his stock as many times a year as he should.

And fewer "turn overs" of merchandise mean higher prices for the consumer. He cannot escape them.

Unless the merchant is taking advantage of every element to derive the fullest returns from his investment in floor space, heat, light, sales forces and service departments, he is compelled to boost the figures on his price tags in order to "come out" successfully on his net profits.

The persuasive appeal of intelligent, truthful advertising, persistently applied, is the only thing that really can bring the volume of sales to a peak that will permit the reduction of profit on individual items.

When you buy advertised goods you have the satisfaction of knowing that the dealer who sells them does so with a confident belief in their merit.

It is natural that the lavishing of wide publicity on any product should tend to elevate the quality of that product. The manufacturer, through advertising, creates a demand for the article or articles he makes. If he expects to hold the market resulting from that demand he must make a worthy product.

The volume of his production built up by the constantly growing market, due to advertising, lowers manufacturing costs and enables both the manufacturer and the retailer to take a minimum profit on their sales.

The alert retailer cashes in on the reputation established by honorable manufacturers and sticks with their goods. He knows it will hold his trade and result in quick "turn overs."

The advertising columns of the newspapers sketch briefly and attractively the buying opportunities of the day. They lead the consumer to the centers of reliable dealers from whom he may expect square dealing and dollar-for-dollar values. They constitute an authentic guide to the legitimate stores in every community.

Because this is true it will pay you to read the advertisements closely and constantly. Compare values and make the most of your expenditures.

You'll save hours in time and dollars in money by knowing what you want, where to get it and, approximately, how much it will cost you.

WHAT'S YOUR IDEA?

What is the most crying need of the hour in this community?

We would like to have some answers to this question for publication in the columns of our paper. The answers should be brief and to the point.

Our local authorities are of our best citizenry. They are eminently practical, and are capable of absorbing and making the most of the diversified ideas that would thus be presented to them.

Think the matter over with care, and then write us your opinion of what is most needed in this town.

No matter how brilliant your personal ideas may be, they can be of no value to the community unless you make them public.

That is what we seek—publicity of ideas. It is good for us all. Spring yours!

A good way to start business to booming again in this country is for every man to pull the strings to his money bags. There can be no appreciable resumption of business without plenty of money in circulation, and money can not circulate while it is locked up.

And now that he has had his own little private war in West Virginia Uncle Sam need no longer be considered a back number. He can strut along with the best of them.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Money no longer makes the mare go. It buys gas instead.

Some people live to learn without really learning how to live.

There is a vast difference between Henry Ford and the other railroad magnates of the country. Henry has taught them how to reduce freight rates without reducing their net incomes, but they persistently refuse to be taught.

Seeing Is Believing

Sure, everyone has a few personal friends who can be made to believe he is a merchant, when he isn't even a good storekeeper, but there are thousands of people who would be reminded all the time that he was in the game regularly if he carried an ad in the Mt. Scott Herald.

Seeing is believing, and more than ever so, since old man Volstead took a shot at us. And when a man sees, he has to believe.

Where do you stand on the question? Do you keep your light so hidden that only the bushel basket shows? You have heard of the man who wouldn't let loose of a dime until he saw the milled edges of two dollars? "You ain't it." Do you want the Herald to guarantee the results? Come in and talk it over.

Didn't Need the Rest
A young man living over in Clackamas hired out to work in the fields. The boss went out in the afternoon of the first day to see how the boy was making it. He found him lying in the shade of a tree, smoking a cigarette. "Tired?" asked the boss. "Nope!" answered the young man. "Hain't done nothin' to make me tired. Just a layin' here waitin' for quittin' time s'ce I c'n come to supper." For the past two years a great many young and old men and women have tried to earn a living that same way.

International Memorial Arch Dedicated
On the border line between the state of Washington and the province of British Columbia, at a point near Blaine, where ocean, railway and highway meet, last week was formally dedicated a memorial arch or portal consecrated to the cause of peace among nations. The American speakers were Oswald West, ex-governor of Oregon; Thomas Burke of Seattle, representing the English-speaking union; W. J. Coyle, lieutenant-governor of Washington; R. H. Gale, mayor of Vancouver, Wash.; E. T. Mathes, mayor of Bellingham; and Harold Hunter, mayor of Blaine.

Who's the Hoodoo?
G. W. Hartfelder obtained a job as a blacksmith at the Prouty Lumber mill, Timber, Oregon, last Friday, and started to work that noon. He had made plans to stay for the winter but the "best laid plans of mice and men" were shattered again when the mill burned down at three, Sunday morning. Mr. Hartfelder now jocularly states that he just went to Timber for a week-end and came back with the small end. He doesn't know whether the mill hoodooed him, or vice versa.
