A PRAYER FOR MEN

God of Heroes, list, we pray;
Harken to the words we say!
Men are needed in the fight
Of the wrong against the right;
Men to wield a mighty sword!
But the cannon that have roared,
Hush their turbulence and stress
By the shore and wilderness!

Men are needed! Hear our cry!
Men are asked, but not to die
In a bane and bleeding host!
Sought are they who love the most;
They who toil and they who strive
Peacefully to keep alive
One bright flame upon the shrine
Of this land of yours and mine.

Men are wanted! Strong men, too,
Touched with health, the rose, the dew;
Crowned with plenty, crowned with cheer
Greater with each passing year!
Men are urged to join the ranks;
Not where War's bound saber clanks,
But in dreams, in hopes and toil;
By the forge and on the soil!

Give us men! Not shreds and ghosts
Of the former battle-hosts!
Give us cottages and farms;
None of lurid War's alarms!
Give us manhood strong and prime;
None of poverty and crime!
Give us, Father, as we ask;
Men for every noble task!
—Leslie Clare Manchester in "Our Dumb Animals."
