In The Arleta Melting Pot

The smile of the Arleta branch, children's librarian, is a real one as it beams over this group of children, bent upon becoming better Americans. While their parents learn from Americanization classes the great gift of Americanism, these tots, too, learn that this land offers a chance to the humblest. They learn that the question America asks is, "what can you do?" not "What have you?" nor yet, "Who are You?" They learn that the laborer here is worthy of his hire and that there is less of class, caste and a striving towards less religious bigotry here than in most foreign lands.
