Some of these loyalists went to England and Scotland, and others came up North. Our head offices often were inundated with refugees, homeless, penniless, and in dire want. A father and mother with three or four small children in a state of starvation was a common sight. They had been put out of their once happy and comfortable homestead, and had made their way, often on foot, to Ulster. Then a frightened woman would turn up and ask for a night's lodging. Her story was reminiscent of Turkish atrocities. Her busband and only son had been done to death by Sinn Fein gunmen, and she herself turned out on the roadside.

The coming budget of the Free State parliament will show a deficit of at least £14,000,000 (pounds). A sum of £10,000,000 (pounds) is needed to maintain the army alone and that amount considerably exceeds the whole of the pre-war revenue for Southern Ireland.

Law Becomes Mere Farce I admit the Free State soldiers are doing their best to restore law and order and are suffering severely. But this law has been reduced to a farce. The weapon forged by the old leaders of Sinn Fein to get rid of the British bread. Those who should have befriended Ulster have often
