

TALES OF IRISH ORPHANS. TIME SPENT IN TRAVELING
How Changed Conditions Affect Their Classification in Several Instances.

A traveler who recently spent some time in Ireland was much interested in an orphan asylum with the founding and maintenance of which the family she was visiting had had much to do, relates Youth's Companion.

On her first inspection of the place, two bright, rosy little sisters, who had been rescued from a life of squalor and abuse—but a short time before, were pointed out to her. They overheard her call them "two of your little orphans," and came forward hand in hand to correct the statement. Bobbing a little courtesy and looking eagerly in her face, the eldest mite explained politely:

"It's orphans we was, ma'am, but we're inmates now."

The next day she and her friends stopped to speak to a laborer with a large family, who had been reluctantly obliged, when his widowed sister's boy was left upon his hands, to allow the little fellow to come upon charity. His pride and his affections had both suffered in doing so, although he knew the boy would be well cared for.

"And is little Thad still at the orphanage, Michael?" asked one of the ladies.

"Och, no, me lady dear," was the joyous reply. "Thanks be to the saints, he's an orphan no longer; he's workin' at a thrade outside."

A few days later the guest was talking with a young man who had spent some time as an employe at the asylum, and who, she understood, had been brought up there. In this she was mistaken.

"Not by any manner of means, ma'am," he assured her. "Me father only died a year ago, and me twinty the day of the funeral. Sure I'm not an orphan at all, at all!"

GOLD HUNTERS' WEAPONS.

Some Lately Plowed Up in Kansas Field Belongs of the Early Spaniards.

While plowing in his field near Eufaula recently Mr. Charles Gibson uncovered a large number of weapons, some of which were relics of an old style, some blunderbusses, a few old time pistols and a couple of swords. All these weapons, says the Kansas City Journal, are in a fair state of preservation, and are apparently of Spanish make.

According to Creek tradition, a party of adventurous Spaniards, numbering 54, in the year 1664, left New Orleans on burros and went to the territory in search of gold. They secured all the precious metal they could carry, and on their way back they were beset by a band of Shawnees near Standing Rock, eight miles east of Eufaula, and a great battle followed. The Spaniards, with the exception of two, who escaped on a raft, were annihilated.

It is supposed that the weapons plowed up on Mr. Gibson's place are the ones that were used by the Spaniards mentioned above.

CLERICAL WHITENERS.

For some time past it had been recognized that the church schools in Old Ford were in a very unsatisfactory condition, but no funds were forthcoming to enable them to be redecored. The newly-appointed rector, Rev. J. H. Kitecat, together with his clergy, the members of the local branch of the Church of England Workingmen's society, and Mr. George Lansbury, late socialist and radical candidate for Bow and Bromley, set to work to scrub, wash and paint the school. The work was expeditiously completed, and the parishioners are now proud of their spick and span educational institutions.

THEY RESIST MOISTURE.

In Lapland garments made of reindeer wool are famous for their moisture resisting property as well as for their warmth. The hair, unlike that of many animals, is not hollow throughout its length, but is divided into many watertight cells filled with air, which appear to be under compression, so that when the garments are placed in water the hair, or wool, swells without breaking, and the wearer is buoyed up and does not readily sink if he falls overboard. Such garments are in common use among the Swedes and Norwegians.

Large Part of the Day Spent by Suburbanites Going To and From Business.

"Do New Yorkers ever stop to think how much time they spend in traveling to and from business every day, and what it amounts to in their lives?" This question was asked by a Berlin merchant in the Marlborough hotel the other day, reports the Herald.

"I notice," he added, "that your business men usually live in the suburbs and spend about an hour coming in in the morning and an hour going home at night. This means two hours a day, or 12 hours in six working days of the week, 1,864 hours a year. Figure this out yourself, and just see how much time you waste in your railway cars. And yet you pride yourselves on being a time saving nation."

"In Europe it is different. In Berlin and Paris, for instance, a business man lives either in the same building with his business or within short walking distance of it. We don't have to rush out of bed in the morning, dress hurriedly and often go without breakfast, as you do, to catch our trains. As a rule we take two hours for luncheon, going home to eat it with our family, and in the evening we walk home leisurely instead of rushing for our trains as you do. I tell you this is such an advantage. Of course, New York is so situated that perhaps the same plan would not work here and you are obliged to live some distance from your office; but nevertheless I think you people waste too much time traveling, and considering the little time you can spend at home I don't see that you profit much by living in the suburbs. You are far ahead of us Europeans in many things, but you have yet to learn how to be more conservative with your time. It counts, I tell you, and this strenuous life does not pay."

SLAVE TO COLOR BREAKS.

Man Hardly Knows His Own Wife, Her Appearance Changes So Often.

"I'm glad I'm not my wife," said the dyspeptic, as he settled down to his hygienic luncheon of rare roast beef, creamed onions and boiled rice, relates the Philadelphia Record. "I'd be dead if I were. I have trouble enough keeping alive as it is."

NEWEST IN WHEELBARROWS

Folding Steel Frame Makes Convenient Conveyance for the Suburban Gardener.

Wheelbarrows of steel or wood, or a combination of these materials, are made in great variety of form and construction, and for many special uses; but perhaps the newest thing in wheelbarrows is one made with a folding steel frame, which can be knocked down for shipment. The body and handles of this wheelbarrow are of wood, but the legs and braces, constituting the supporting frame, are of steel and are riveted together and bolted to the body when the wheelbarrow is set up.

The folding steel frame wheelbarrow may, by virtue of its collapsibility, present another advantage. It is a garden harrow. It would be quite possible for the suburban dweller about to start a garden, and impatient for a wheelbarrow with which to begin work, to buy one of these folding steel frame wheelbarrows, knocked down, and have it wrapped up and carry it home with him. Even in its knocked-down form, what with its width and the length of its handles, a folding steel frame wheelbarrow would make for him considerable of a bundle to carry; but he could probably get it home without knocking down more than 15 or 20 people in getting on and off the cars with it, where he couldn't have carried an old-style wheelbarrow at all.

To Dispel Haze. The climate of the great glacier of the Grindelwald in the heart of the Bernese Oberland of Switzerland is an experience that every seeker after new sensations should try, says Kathleen L. Greig, in Four-Track News. He had best prepare himself by resting a few days at Interlaken. Then he may go forth some fine morning with a jaunty Alpine hat on his head, stout boots on his feet, a feeling of ennui in his heart, and come back minus all three. First he will drive along a perfect road through tiny villages, past rainbow-tinted meadows full of wild flowers, and turbulent little streams. Then the road becomes steeper, and the scenery about him grows savage. The valley below begins to look very far away, the monster snow-capped Alps frown above him, and at last he approaches the great glacier of Grindelwald.
