We do not hesitate in reiterating an item that appeared in the TRIBUNE some time ago anent the Curry county witnesses in the P. F. & L. Co. land fraud trials. The editor of the Globe would have it appear that we called them collectively a lot of "perjured scoundrels," a conclusion that we did not suppose that even a "solid" intellect could place upon the piece. The TRIBUNE is well aware that the majority of these witnesses are among the most upright and substantial citizens of our county, but that there are also some—perhaps but one or two—reprobates among them, there is much reason to believe, and it would not be surprising if one of the latter is found in the party who claimed to have "inside" information and went along to "keep the boys straight."

The bark, Star of Bengal, drifted upon rocks and broke into three pieces at Wrangel, Alaska, Sept. 23rd, drowning one hundred and ten out of the one hundred and thirty-seven persons who were on board, while those rescued are reported to be physical and mental wrecks from the exposure they underwent. If the story of the survivors is true the case is parallel to that of the Valencia which was wrecked at the entrance to the Sound more than a year ago in one of the most apalling disasters that ever happened on this coast. As will be remembered the Valencia pounded on the rocks for nearly three days, finally breaking up and drowning her gallant crew and passengers while several vessels stood by whose captains were too cowardly to make an attempt to save helpless women and children and their fellow-man from a watery grave, while the sea was such that a few fortunate ones drifted away from the wreck on a raft and were saved. The captain of the Star of Bengal says that two tugs were near that could have gotten a line to his vessel and saved her with little difficulty, and if such be the case severe punishment should be meted out to their captains. Man that will not risk life to save life is unfit for such positions of responsibility, and with such as Captain McIntyre of the South Portland, which was wrecked off Cape Blanco a few years ago, who on safely getting ashore went to bed to make up for a few hours lost sleep while the poor souls that were under his care were perishing at sea, they should be deported to some distant island where they could use their chivalry in rescuing one another from the savages.

Waterbury, Conn., Sept. 18.—Robt. McCormick, eccentric coal dealer, sold some real estate and the banks being all closed, put $1,400 in a bag of oats in his barn as the last place he thought burglars would look for it. The next morning he forgot it and fed the oats to his horse. Recovering his memory at noon, he went to the manger and found it licked clean, but the roll, with a thick rubber band, was there intact. The horse must have swallowed it, but unable to digest the roll, coughed it up. The money lay in the corner of the manger, a dirty mess, but redeemable by the heat of the kitchen stove. Only recently McCormick had a big roll in his coat pocket and left the coat in an apple tree three days. The coat was so worn it was safe, his wife said, but the tramp who took the coat for a pillow was awfully distressed afterwards when he read of the account in a newspaper.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Editor TRIBUNE:—A Sunday School paper rehashes current stories about how this "great man" and that had his beginnings, and lays particular stress on the merits of those who became wealthy!

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, E. H. Harriman, Grover Cleveland and the Astors are named as examples worthy of imitation by the generation of boys now entering up on the stage of action. Far from the humble way the elder Vanderbilt is credited with having laid the foundation of his great fortune, the truth is that, as purchasing agent of the War Department in 1812 he turned the nimble penny which developed into millions later on.

J. Gould, in his efforts to climb to high eminence, was guilty of forgery, perjury and other high crimes. His forgery of stock shares which enabled him to reach the presidency of the Erie Railroad would have landed him in penitentiary, but for the notorious fact that he bribed several "great" Judges in New York, some of whom were later successfully impeached for these very crimes; and the which fact ought to be sufficient evidence of the truth of the claims set up by the Chicago Convention and later reinstated at Denver, that our Courts had always been the "palladium of our liberties!"

Then there is E. H. Harriman, held up as an honorable example of great success in the rapid accumulation of millions. They say nothing about his success in "rigging the New York stock market in the past, and a glimpse at the Alton deal (now styled the "Alton steal)" ought to be sufficient to stem all people of tollerably decent sensibilities. In that deal Harriman had issued against the Chicago and Alton Rail Road Company without any consideration or equivalent, over six million dollars in bonds, selling the same to himself for a song and later unloading them onto the savings banks of New York State, first securing the passage of a special act through Legislature of that state authorizing Savings Banks to deal in them, as investments. By this one deal (or steal) Harriman cleaned up $60,000,000, whereupon as has lately been made public, the Savings Banks lost TWELVE MILLION DOLLARS! Thus bonds which cost Harriman the expense of printing, he unloaded at $96 each, and the transaction makes plain that he could invest millions getting the special legislation needed and still have many, many millions left as "velvet" pure and simple.

Another "legitimate" speculation out of which Harriman made many millions clean profit, was, when he ordered the "passing" of dividends on Southern and Union Pacific shares for the purpose of "bearing" the market in these shares to the lowest possible point, while his henchmen bought them in at bed-rock figures. At the psychological moment thereafter he ordered a declared of 10 per cent on Union Pacific and 6 per cent of Southern Pacific, which sent the shares he had bought at bedrock sky-rocketing away up when he unloaded on the market.

Later on, Harriman was called before the Interstate Commerce Commissioner and asked to explain the above transaction and also his Alton steal, whereupon he impudently and insolently refused to answer such questions as would throw any light on the subject in hand, and there you are. Any other than a person of wealth would have been fined and hustled off to jail for contempt, and all people are equal before the law, did I hear you say? Bah! And we go on carrying torches in the procession for political pretenders who would not if they could and could not if they would, teach predatory wealth that it is not the whole thing.

As to Grover Cleveland and his pals, J. P. Morgan and August Belmont the less said the better. But I cannot forbear in conclusion from noticing the latest discovery that Bryan worked his way through college! when the fact is, that his father was moderately wealthy, while holding a lucrative judgeship in his district for many years besides.

Suits for $5.

A stout man sat in the Hotel Knickerbocker yesterday clad in a neat looking gray suit of the two-piece variety. The garments fitted him well, in fact, many persons turned to look, for he seemed so cool. "That," said one of the clerks "is the promoter of the new clothes idea. He is only well to do today but I bet he is worth more than a million a year from now, and if you can put sense in people's heads he'll be worth more than ten millions.

He has discovered a fiber in Central America that can be woven like cloth and costs comparatively nothing. I mean 50 cents of the raw material will make a suit like he's got on. It's thinner than pongee, sheds water and is cooler than pajamas. It will be made in many colors, and he's going to flood the country next year with $5 suits. He'd have done it this year, but couldn't get a hacker. Now he has one and I'll bet you there will be a lot of misery saved all around next year.

New York men are foolish in one way. They will wear dark clothes in these awful days and are afraid some other fellow will sneer at a cheap suit. I envy that man every time I see him, and anybody who can find any fault with his clothes, fit or anything else, must be finicky indeed. If a few sensible men start the crowd will follow.

"This new fiber is vegetable, of course, pliable and soft, and somewhat resembles ramee. You can see how popular it will be, for it keeps its shape, can't shrink and never looks frowsy. That was the trouble with crash suits and others. Why, I'm only 50, yet 30 years ago every New York business man used to wear white duck suits in summer. Now a man in white is gazed at. Hurrah for the $5 suit I say. I wish I had one on now.

Prineville, Or., Sept. 21. Don Caldwell, of the upper Deschutes country, above Bend, reports a thrilling personal encounter with a bear which had slain several of his sheep. Hearing a noise in the middle of the night, Caldwell dressed hurriedly and grabbed up the only gun in camp, a six shooter of 44 caliber. He also had a dirk knife in his belt. Stumbling in the dark across a field of fallen timber he was suddenly confronted by the bear, which at once knocked the pistol out of his hand, and then hugged him. Caldwell, falling, was just able to draw his dirk, which he plunged desperately into bruin's body above the heart. As the bear hugged tighter, their breaths commingling, Caldwell plunged his long knife again into its body, and slowly the animal released its hold. It was some time before the man recovered but when he did the bear was dead and himself and sheep were safe.

President Roosevelt has got another little list. He is said to have referred to Governor Hughes as "ingrate." Whether this is a degree higher or lower than the Ananias Club perhaps time will tell.

MARINE TOADS CANNIBALS.

Sent from New York to Philadelphia "Zoo," They Almost Depleted the Frogpond.

The muster roll of frogs in the aquarium of the "zoo" has been decreasing of late, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. The cause has been found. A cannibal frog (two of them, in fact) was at the bottom of the mystery. They had been living sumptuously.

One day two giant marine toads from the West Indies went to dwell in the aquarium. It was not known at the time that they had cannibalistic tendencies. They came from the New York zoo, but the donors must have forgotten to warn the Philadelphia zoo officials that the toads were fond of a frog diet. Their reception in the frog colony was marked with coolness.

Bullfrogs and piping frogs alike eyed the newcomers with distrust. They had ample cause, as was later shown. One by one the smaller frogs began to disappear. Two small alligators first came under the ban of suspicion. They were removed. That night two more frogs vanished. A turtle was next looked upon with distrust and removed from the frog tank. Still the small frogs continued to disappear.

Recently one of the marine toads was caught redhanded. Keeper Bowers was looking in the tank, when suddenly there was a great commotion in the water. The submarine ferns and grass waved wildly. One toad, the largest, was hunting, and a small frog was swimming the race of his life. He lost and the big fellow seemed to smile as he gulped the little fellow down. It will probably be the last frog he will eat for a long time, unless he decides to devour his mate. The marine toads are now in a separate tank, spending their time looking regretfully across the room at the home they left.

Another rare toad arrived in this city under peculiar circumstances, and the zoo is now its home. It, too, is a West Indian, but of the treetoad family. It made the journey from its native land concealed in a bunch of bananas.

T. J. Downs purchased a bunch of bananas and placed them in his kitchen. That night his wife was awakened by a crackling noise. She thought the house was on fire. Investigation disclosed the tree toad walking up and down the kitchen windows. As it walked the crackling noise was made. On its toes are little vacuum cups, which enable it to hold on to a smooth surface. As the toad raised its feet the air, rushing into these vacuum cups, caused the noise.

A KLEPTOMANIA FOR PIPES.

Woman Had Stolen 2,600 of the Smoking Devices When Captured by Paris Police.

Recently a Parisian shoplifter was arrested and searched. To the amazement of the officials her plunder was not articles of feminine adornment, but several costly meerschaum pipes.

When her apartments were searched no fewer than 2,600 pipes were found, some of which were handsomely colored.

Although for awhile she stoutly protested her innocence, she at last broke down and confessed that she was addicted to the use of tobacco, and suffered from a form of kleptomanja which led her to steal every handsome pipe which she could make away with without discovery.

She made no attempt to dispose of her pipes for profit, but kept them in cabinets in her home. Not one of the pipes, she admitted, had been paid for, but she declared that in taking them she was only obeying an irresistible impulse and was not morally responsible for her crimes.

Mean Thing.

"No," said Miss Passay, "I don't like the photos Kamrer made for me. They make me look like a woman of 40."

"Well," replied Miss Peppry, "you should have told him not to touch them up if you didn't want them to look so youthful."—Philadelphia Press.
