Injustice to Redmond

The Washington, D. C., dispatch published in the Portland Journal of Wednesday evening, February 8th, in which is given the reasons of the comptroller of the currency for refusing to grant the application to organize a national bank in this city, is a glaring injustice to Redmond and the Redmond District.

It is a slap in the face to every resident, business man and property owner in this section.

The dispatch in question shows that Senator Chamberlain is the one responsible for giving out the story.

The Spokesman fails to see what benefit Mr. Chamberlain expects to derive, or what his reasons were for giving out an interview that he surely must know would reflect upon this section of the state.

Are Making Good

Ehret Bros. of this city, proprietors of the largest department store in Crook county, are making good in their endeavors to draw business to this point and make Redmond the best trading town in the county.

This firm is each week holding special sale days and pricing certain lines of goods so low that buyers come here from long distances to take advantage of the bargains offered.

Lynch & Roberts, general merchandise, are also helping to bring trade from a large territory to Redmond, and other merchants in the city are following along the same lines.

A Peculiar Business

The printing and newspaper business is a peculiar business. It is different from any other kind of business in that prices of subscription and advertising and job work seldom change. Where the grocery, the dry goods, the hardware, the meat market and all other kinds of business change their prices as the cost of material, labor, freight, etc. advance, the newspaper business keeps to the same price year after year.

If a newspaper was to advance the price of subscription because the price of paper had gone up, or the freight rate was advanced, there would be a howl that could be heard for miles.

Still it is nothing more than right that they should.

Down in this part of the state all the prices pertaining to the newspaper business are high. In some instances it costs more to get printing stock laid down in Redmond from Portland than the first cost of the stock.

The paper on which The Spokesman is printed, which is the best print paper we can buy, costs in Portland 6 cents a pound. The freight rate to bring this paper to Redmond in some instances reaches to 6 cents a pound more, making a total of 12 cents a pound for the blank paper before any labor is put on it. There are 16 sheets to the pound, which makes the paper cost three quarters of a cent each—a mighty high price for paper which is sold to subscribers at $1.50 per year.

With paper at this price there is not a cent in a subscription price of $1.50 per year. But the people would not stand for a raise of 50 cents a year.

It is the same with the paper that is used in job printing. All kinds of job stock is fifty per cent higher here than in the east and yet job printing prices here are very near the same as obtain there. All kinds of printing material costs high to get into this section, but the printing offices do not dare to raise the prices for some of the customers will come back at them with figures quoted from some dinky printing office in the east that is operating with a hatful of type, and which makes cheap prices for a class of work that no decent printing office would turn out.

The printing business should be conducted, as far as prices are concerned on the same lines as other businesses are—prices made according to the cost of the raw material, stock and labor. But the writer never expects to live to see that day come.

Anniversary Number

The 50th anniversary number of the Portland Oregonian, consisting of 128 pages, published on the 4th of this month, was one of the greatest newspapers ever published on the coast. It celebrated the 50th anniversary of the paper as a daily paper, and was replete with good things about Portland and the whole state at large. A history of the paper from its birth was given, and related the hardships and struggles that obtained in early days when the paper was printed on a hand press. The Oregonian today stands at the head of all daily newspapers published on the Pacific Coast. One thing about the news in the Oregonian is, that when you see a story in that paper you can make up your mind that it is as nearly correct as it is possible to get it.

When it comes to contributing money toward a good cause the Redmond people always dig down deep in their pockets. The entertainment given recently for the benefit of the Redmond Public Library netted a good round sum, and the library will be placed now on a sound footing.

When we hear a person knocking about the place they live in we always wonder why they stay there. Why don't they pack up and get out? They would never be missed.

The person who won't stand up for their own town is of no benefit to the town or community, and the sooner they eliminate themselves from the place the better it will be for all concerned.

The 4th of July celebration that Redmond proposes to give this year will be, in the language of the classics, a "humdinger", whatever that is.
