Best Way to Advertise a Town

The best and most effective way to advertise a town is to send copies of the local paper to outsiders, so they can see from day to day what is happening in that locality. If the Commercial Club or any person desires to let the outside world know the facts about Redmond and this section the best way, and one that will bring results, would be to subscribe for a certain number of copies of the Daily Spokesman and have them sent regularly to people who are inquiring about this section.

Redmond—the first town in Central Oregon to have a daily paper. That shows the people here have the vim and enterprise that go to make cities.

Thomas Bilyeu of the Portland Cement, Tile & Equipment Co., of Portland, is here with Mr. Tudor looking over railroad construction work.

The First Advertiser And Subscriber

J. H. Mendenhall enjoys the honor of being the first advertiser to place an order for publicity in the columns of The Daily Spokesman, and also the first subscriber to the paper. Mr. Mendenhall says a daily newspaper is just the medium he likes to advertise in, and the Spokesman will see that he gets results from his publicity.

Lynch & Roberts, the general merchants and druggists of this city, are making arrangements to move their drug department into the store building on the corner of 6th and E streets, adjoining their present store building. The increasing business of the firm makes it an imperative necessity that they have more room, and they have rented the corner store for a term of years. The new store will be complete in all its appointments.

Interested in Central Ore.

One-third of the great army of 22,000 people in the middle west and eastern states who registered their names and addresses as being definitely interested in the northwest during the six months tour of the Northern Pacific car, wanted to know about this section of Oregon and its opportunities.

The tour which began last October came to an end a few days ago, and the registration books showed that 7200 of the people desiring detailed information expressed a wish to come to Central Oregon if they could find the right opening.

The other inquiries were distributed among a number of states tributary to the Northern Pacific.

The trip covered covered 5000 miles.
