A Redmond Farmer Sends Samples to Portland Commercial Club

Portland Journal: Dan Catlow, one of the most progressive farmers of the Redmond, Or., district, has brought some samples of products raised on his farm to the Portland Commercial Club. They show what can be done by the use of intelligent methods. He brought alfalfa, rye and wheat stalks that are surprisingly thrifty and indicative of the fertility of the soil.

Mr. Catlow formerly lived in Portland, and he now has a son on the east side. He owns 640 acres of land near Redmond, although his postoffice is Cline Falls, and in his opinion, that country will beat western Oregon in raising chickens, potatoes, hogs and alfalfa particularly, while other products thrive there also. Mr. Catlow knows what he is talking about for he farmed 280 acres in the vicinity of Turner at one time, and he is a strong booster for central Oregon in spite of the attractions of the Willamette valley section.
