MARRIED MEN AGAIN VICTORS

Second Ball Game Is Won From Bachelors By a 7 to 6 Score

GAME IS REPLETE
WITH GOOD PLAYS

Next Thing Will Be to Have a Game Between the Fats and Leans

The married men of this city again proved to the bachelors that they were "there with bells on" when they defeated them for the second time as the ball park last Sunday afternoon.

The bachelors had claimed that a "jinx" worked against them the first game when they lost out by a score of 9 to 7, and gave it out in big gobs that they surely would make the benedicts "go south" in the second game. But the married men "refused to sign the papers" for their own defeat, and captured the game by a 7 to 6 score.

This game, like the first, was a good one, and several "heart disease" plays were handed out. The fans surely got the worth of their money, even though but seven innings were played.

Both games were played for the benefit of the Commercial Club, and nearly $50 will be added to the general fund of the club as the result of the games. There is some talk now of getting up a game between the fats and leans of the city for the benefit of the club.

The Dear Children.

The Maid (in Boston)—If you please, ma'am, Master Jimmie has busted th' parlor window, and Miss Jane has hit Mr. Jingles with a stone, an' Master Bobbie has bit a strange little girl in the arm. The Mother (wearily)—That will do, Jane. It is not well to take the inconvenient activities of normal children too seriously.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Physician's Answer.

A patient once asked her physician why his mustache was black and his hair was gray. "Why," he replied, "my mustache is twenty years younger than the hair on my head."

FEAR THEIR OWN CHEFS.

Wealthy Folks Who Go to Restaurants to Enjoy Piqueur Dishes.

In England they say the newly rich man lives in fear of his valet. In New York the family that has just "struck it rich" lives in fear of its chef. If you don't believe it, go into a tea room any day and see the wealthy matrons who drive up in motorcars and order corned beef hash. This statement was made by a successful tea room owner. She explained further: "When I first started my tea room I expected to cater to the women shoppers who like an inexpensive lunch. Consequently I planned a menu of cheap homemade dishes. Fancy my surprise when one noon in came a walking jewelry exhibit, who ordered corned beef hash. She became one of my regular patrons, and she frankly told me she was afraid to order the hash from her chef for fear he would think it a vulgar taste. Then I began to realize how many people were really tyrannized over by their chefs."

"A silver king now living on Fifth avenue comes in here frequently for luncheon. One day he told me his troubles."

"I come here to get some butter," he confessed. "That French cook of ours told mother it wasn't stylish, and we don't have it any more. At first she'd have some on the table when there wasn't any company. I used to say to her, 'Mother, if there ain't any visitors tonight give me some butter—a large hunk.' But as we're always having company now it's easier to come here."

"A wealthy piano manufacturer has a standing order for a boiled dinner every Friday, and his wife comes in and joins him in a 'rice pudding with bugs in it,' as they call it, for dessert."

"Two very grand ladies from Fifty-ninth street come sneaking down here in their motorcar on the mornings when we have fresh fried doughnuts. They came from Vermont originally, and they want their doughnuts for breakfast, and they are afraid to confess it to their cook."

"Finally, the other day, a big insurance man walked in and asked if we ever cooked dishes to order. I told him we did if they weren't too elaborate."

"He laughed at that. 'I saw your sign and smelled some doughnuts frying, and I wondered if you could cook me up a dish of nice yellow turnip the way they used to have it years ago. I've been wanting some for the last five years. You can name your own price.'"

"Altogether," concluded the tea room owner, "I have decided that plain folks ought to be mighty thankful they haven't a French chef to tyrannize over their meals."—New York Times.

Willing to Change His Methods.

"But why does your father object to me?" demanded the humble suitor.

"Because," explained the haughty beauty of proud lineage, "papa says his ancestors have always been gentlemen of leisure and you have to work for a living."

"Well, tell him I don't expect to after we are married," replied the humble suitor.—Philadelphia Record.

Have You Found YOUR Real Estate?

Somewhere in this city is a piece of property YOU OUGHT to OWN because it would be worth to you little more than to anyone else.

You probably WILL own it, sometime. But don't try to locate it NOW, or SOON, by watching real estate ads, and answering "likely" ones.
