MISREPRESENTS

of the city is not given. Says there is but one newspaper published here, when it is a well known fact that two papers have been published here for over a year and a half. It is intimated in the above that there is but one hotel here, when there are two, both well able to take care of the traveling public. Then it is stated that there is a good opening here for a steam laundry and a jewelry store. Both of these classes of business have been in operation here for some time—a jewelry store for over a year and a half, and a laundry for nearly a year.

From reading the railroad's description of Redmond the impression is gained that this city is nothing more than a hamlet, when the fact of the matter is that Redmond is today, and has been for the past year and a half the most progressive, up-to-date city in Central Oregon, equipped with a water system, electric lighting plant, well graded streets, and large stores that draw trade from a territory many miles in extent.

More building has been done in Redmond during the past two years than in any other city or town in Central Oregon, and today Redmond is receiving and forwarding more freight from the two railroads entering the city than all the other towns along the line combined. More cars of freight have been received here since the inauguration of freight and passenger traffic to this point on November 1st, than at all the other towns on the line put together.

The railroad publication does not contain any views of the Redmond farming country, although the city is located in the center of the largest irrigated section in the central part of the state, and the farmers and ranchers in the Redmond District grow the best crops to be found in either Central or Eastern Oregon.

In a further description of the Redmond country the publication says: "Oats average 35 bushels to the acre." This is another mistake. If the farmers and ranchers in this section could not grow more than 35 bushels to the acre of oats they would not sow this crop. Sixty to 75 bushels to the acre is what is being raised here right along, and this is easily done by the aid of irrigation, for which the Redmond District is famous.

Publicity agents of the Great Northern railroad have been in Redmond and through this district not later than the past summer, and they became thoroughly acquainted with the conditions here, and why they discriminated against this city and the surrounding country is past understanding, and it is understood the railroad company is desirous of settling up this part of the state. But by misrepresentations they will not induce many settlers to come.

The people in this section who have lived here for years and have pioneered through hardships and used their utmost efforts to bring the soil under a high degree of cultivation, do not like to have their efforts disregarded and turned down the way the railroad people have done in their "Oregon" publication. The people of Redmond who have dug down into their pockets for the past few years to make Redmond the most prosperous city in Central Oregon, are also somewhat sore that the railroad they have looked for putting the true facts regarding this section, should issue such misleading statements as their publication contains.

Redmond and Vicinity

C. N. Ehret went to Portland this week on a business trip.

Catholic services will be held next Sunday at 9 a. m. in Anker's hall.

Mrs. Unruh, state president of the W. C. T. U., gave a talk to mothers in the M. E. church here Tuesday afternoon, and a general discussion in the evening at the same place.

George Hess arrived here from Tacoma Monday night, and will make Redmond his future home. He is connected with N. A. Powers in the garage and machine shop business here.

The ladies of the Juniper Reading Circle entertained their husbands at the residence of Mrs. J. A. Willcox Monday evening. Games were played and refreshments served.

Chicken thieves are operating again in the city. Tuesday night a turkey and some chickens were taken from the chicken yard in the rear of the Oregon Cafe. Chickens have been stolen from this place before, and no clue can be obtained of the thieves.

As a Precaution.

An amusing story is told of the old journalist Frederic Guest Tomlin.

One day he found his office locked and the office boy missing. When the boy appeared Tomlin reproved him for oversleeping, a charge which the boy tearfully refuted.

"It's this way, sir," he said. "My uncle was hung at the Old Bailey this morning, and, although we weren't on speaking terms with him, I thought, as one of the family, I ought to be there."

"Quite right," said Tomlin. "Never neglect your family duties, but when another of your relations is to be hanged please to leave the office key under the mat."—London Chronicle.

WHERE CHESS RULES.

All the People, Young and Old, Play the Game in Strohbeck.

Chess is king in the German town of Strohbeck. All the inhabitants, young and old, men and women, boys and girls, play at the ancient game with a skill and assiduity that are more than remarkable. Youngsters absorb the intricacies of the royal game just as they learn their A B C, and the Strohbeck child is ever a match for the average player elsewhere.

Chess is taught in the schools of Strohbeck, and the pupils carry chessboards as the American school child carries his satchel of books. The whole town breathes an atmosphere of chess.

Visit any local shop and the shopman will lay aside his chessboard in order to attend to your wants and pick it up the moment these are satisfied, to renew his attention upon some problem or to continue an exciting game with his assistant. At the cafes and other places of refreshment chessboards and chessmen are provided for the entertainment of visitors.

Should you visit one of the old inns of the place called "The Chessboard" the genial landlord will show you, should you appear worthy of the honor, a set of chessmen presented to it in 1650. Two princes, the story runs, played upon this board and with these chessmen. The inscription on the board itself confirms all the town's privileges, so that in a way it may be said that the charter of the place is engrossed upon a chessboard.

The extraordinary popularity of chess in Strohbeck is accounted for by a tradition concerning a certain Graf Gummelin, who was imprisoned in the tower there in the year A. D. 1011. He chalked out a chessboard on his dungeon floor and made some rough pieces. In time the jailer became interested in the Graf's maneuvers on the checkered field, and the two played together. The jailer ultimately taught the game to others, and it won a popularity which it has never lost in the quaint German town.
