A PRAIRIE AND A LAKE.

Sometimes it is the One and Sometimes the Other.

Among the strange things to be met with in Florida is a section of country which changes with the seasons and is alternately a prairie and a lake. It is two miles south of Gainesville, and at certain times strangers wonder why it is called a "prairie," for they look out upon a broad stretch of water so deep that a storm churns its surface into rolling whitecapped billows. At times the commerce of the lake is done by steamer, while at other times you can go over the same route in a stage, from the wheels of which clouds of dust roll.

On the edge of the prairie, half walled in by rock and dense with immense trees draped in long festo-oons of moss, is a pool of water called "The Sink." Its depth has never been sounded.

From it an underground river flows and makes its way no one knows where. Some time an acre of land, trees and all, will fall into the underground river, and then the drainage of the prairie becomes obstructed and the prairie goes dry.
In a year or two the river will sweep around the obstruction and the prairie becomes wet.

There are a number of these sinks in the neighborhood of Gainesville, all of them as round as a dollar and averaging from a quarter to a half acre in extent.

A little way north of Gainesville is a pretty and mysterious spot called the "Devil's Millhopper." A large stream of water comes down hill with considerable force and disappears in a pool that has no visible outlet.

Near Brooksville there is another pool very similar to the Devil's Millhopper. A stream of water pours into it and is swallowed up in a whirlpool in the center. Throw a log in it and it will be carried around the pool many times, gradually drawing nearer to the center. When it reaches the center it suddenly disappears. The people in the neighborhood do not dare to go too near the Brooksvillepool, and it would be a very bold man who would launch a boat and trust himself upon it.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Hidden Warning.

It is recorded in history that when Darius, king of Persia, invaded Scythia the ruler of the latter country, Idanthuras, sent him a message consisting of a mouse, a frog, a bird, an arrow and a plow.
The wisest men of the army puzzled over the meaning of it, which was conjectured to be that the empire was surrendered. It was supposed that the mouse signified the dwellings, the frog the waters, the bird the air, the arrow the arms and the plow the land. But it turned out eventually that the interpretation intended was that unless Darius and his soldiers could fly like birds, burrow like mice or betake themselves like frogs to the water they would never escape the weapons of the Scythians and make their way out of the country.

Largest of Flowers.

The largest of all the flowers of the world is said to be the rafflesia, a native of Sumatra, so called after Sir Stamford Raffles. This immense plant, says the Scientific American, is composed of five round petals of a brickish color, each measuring a foot across. These are covered with numerous irregular yellowish white swellings. The petals surround a cup nearly a foot wide, the margin of which bears the stamens. The cup of the rafflesia is filled with a fleshy disk, the upper surface of which is covered with projections like miniature cows' horns. The cup, when free from its contents, will hold about twelve pints. The flower weighs about fifteen pounds and is very thick, the petals being three-quarters of an inch.

THE REDMOND SPOKESMAN

Cheerless Palaces.

Palaces lacked what are now ordinary comforts even in modern times and especially for a period prior to the reign of Louis XIV. in France. They were magnificently decorated, but the windows were small and not well placed, and the rooms were filled with magnificent but not particularly comfortable furniture. Fires were seldom lighted in the immense, beautifully sculptured marble fireplaces. Usually the only fire was to be found in the bedchamber at the end of a suite of rooms. At Versailles in 1695, it is reported, the water and wine froze in the king's glasses at table.

Got 'Em Mixed.

A nervous looking man walked into a grocery with his baby on one arm and a kerosene can on the other, placed the can on the counter and said, "Sit there a moment, dear." Then, holding the baby up to the dazed clerk, he added, "Fill this thing up with kerosene."—San
