Hardy as an Architect.
Most people know that Thomas Hardy's first profession was that of architecture, but fewer are probably aware of the nature of his earliest efforts as a scribbler. It was a rather strange one, consisting in the writing of love letters to the village girls of his native place to their soldier sweet-hearts in India. He did not even, like Samuel Richardson, compose the letters, but was merely an amanuensis. When Mr. Hardy began to write on his own account his first article appeared in Chambers' Journal. It was an article entitled "How I Built Myself a House," written when the embryo novelist was designing churches with Sir Arthur Blomfield. Mr. Hardy was fond of his first profession, and for twelve years he enjoyed it, becoming a prize man of the Royal Institution of British Architects in 1863. But by the time he was thirty it had become clear to him that his work lay among books rather than houses and churches, and he relinquished architecture for literature after the appearance of his first volume, "Desperate Remedies."—Westminster Gazette.

Magnificent Kaieteur.
One of the greatest natural wonders in the world is the falls of Kaieteur, in British Guiana. The valley through which the river flows, below the falls, is quite impassable, and probably no one has ever reached the bottom of the fall. The fall is 741 feet high, more than four times the height of Niagara, more than three times the height of Bunker Hill monument, 200 feet higher than the Washington monument and 200 feet higher than St. Peter's dome. A smooth but rapid river, nearly 400 feet wide, flows quietly to the brink and turns quietly downward. In its fall it breaks into soft white mist and reaches the bottom in a chaos of seething clouds. There is a gentle roar. Only now and then, from the hidden caverns at the bottom, a deep, thunderous growl arises that gives some hint of the forces contending there.—National Geographic Magazine.

A Feathered Beauty.
The quetzal of Guatemala is considered the most beautiful bird in the world. Its plumage vies with the rainbow and shines with a metallic luster. Until within the last few years it was unknown to science, mainly owing to the fact that it is a hermit among the feathered creatures, delighting in the silence of high altitudes. It dwells on mountain heights above 7,000 feet in elevation. The quetzal was the royal bird of the Aztecs, and its plumes were used to decorate the headdresses and cloaks of the kings of that land. Its breast is a brilliant scarlet, while its green tail attains a length of three feet. It is about the size of the common pigeon. It nests in holes in rotten trees, which it enlarges with its bill, so as to make a roomy and comfortable residence. The young are hatched totally devoid of feathers.

A Case of Poetic Justice.
The following is a case of poetic justice as meted out in France: A Parisian architect was sitting in his office when he heard a knock at the door. As he wished to be alone he took no notice of the knock, but went on with his work. A few moments later he heard a key moving in the lock. Not doubting that his visitor was a robber, the architect armed himself with a revolver and quietly hid behind some curtains. Presently the thief entered and proceeded to rifle the place. Then suddenly he started and grew pale. In a mirror he had seen a revolver leveled at his head from behind the curtains. "Open the window," ordered the architect, "and shout 'Police!'"
The burglar had no alternative but to obey and so summoned the officer by whom he was to be arrested.—Green Bag.

Scarcely English.
It was the lunch hour and the book-keeper had contrived to have five minutes' chat with the girl who kept the petty cash. He was in love with her and had summoned up sufficient courage to propose.
"Marry you?" exclaimed the girl. "Good gracious, no! I don't want nothing to do with you. I wouldn't marry you—not if you was the last man on earth. Is that plain English?"
The bookkeeper was mortified.
"It is certainly plain enough," he admitted, "but I'm afraid I can't conscientiously call it English."—London Answers.

Camphor Laurels in Japan.
There is a stringent law in Japan that when one camphor laurel is cut down another must be planted in its place. The tree is hardy and long lived, attaining to an enormous size. It is covered with a small leaf of a vivid green color. The seed, or berries, grow in clusters, resembling the black currant in size and appearance. And the wood is employed for every purpose, from cabinetmaking to shipbuilding.

Took Himself Off.
Foots, the comedian, was once threatened with a whipping because he had caricatured a certain man. He apologized fervently, adding, "Why, I take myself off sometimes!" And, slipping through an opening in a fence, he illustrated the deed.

Presumption.
"What are you writing, old chap?"
"An article entitled 'Advice to Graduates!'"
"Eh! Advice to grad—Well, of all the presumption!"—Boston Transcript.

An Improvement.
King Arthur had just invented the round table.
"Can you invent a bureau that a man's wife will let him have two drawers of?" we asked.—Exchange.

Mission Weddings.
Within two minutes after the cab stopped at the mission door the report spread up and down the street that a wedding was taking place inside. Within another two minutes the room was packed to the very doors. That sudden rush of the crowd to the sanctuary pleased the mission superintendent.

"If I had money to spare," he said, "I would pay a bonus to young couples for getting married in a mission. The moral effect of one wedding is worth a dozen sermons. To get the best effect the ceremony ought to be performed in the middle of the service. No innovation that I have ever introduced has had such a sobering effect on the congregation. The example of a man once as far down in the social scale as themselves having become sufficiently regenerated to assume the responsibilities of life stirs every bit of manhood there is in them."
"The trouble is, I can persuade very few couples to be married in a mission. The bridegrooms do not mind, but the brides want something more exclusive."—New York Times.

Mrs. Pepsys' Temper.
Being at supper my wife did say something that caused me to oppose her in. She used the word devil, which vexed me, and, among other things, I said I would not have her to use that word, upon which she took me up most scornfully, which, before Ashwell and the rest of the world, I know not nowadays how to check, as I would heretofore, for less than that would have made me strike her. So that I fear without great discretion I shall go near to lose, too, my command over her, and nothing do it more than giving her this occasion of dancing and other pleasures, whereby her mind is taken up from her business and finds other sweets besides pleasing of me, and so makes her that she begins not at all to take pleasure in me or study to please me as heretofore.—Diary of Samuel Pepys.

Two Tales of Macready.
It is not always well to strut and fret one's little hour upon the stage too realistically. Macready, who threw himself into his acting heart and soul, used to tell funny stories about the effect of his easy, colloquial manner upon the players collected for his company in small provincial towns. Once in the play of "William Tell" he turned to one of these stupid rustics and put the question, "Do you shoot?" so naturally that the man was quite thrown off his guard and, to his horror, replied, "A little, sir, but I've never had a go with one of them cross-bows." Another time in "Virginia" he asked, "Do you wait for me to lead Virginia in, or will you do so?" only to be greeted unexpectedly by the actor who played Julius with, "Why, really, sir, I don't care—just as you do it in London."

Paying for a Bride in Africa.
In most parts of Africa the native bridegroom has to pay the father of the bride in kind for his wife. In the case of a regular marriage the amount due to the father varies in accordance with the sex of the first child born, a girl being of less value than a boy. The payments consist of cattle, sheep, hoes, spears, perhaps, and sometimes other useful articles. The final payments are often not completed until years after the marriage takes place, and the bridegroom is considered fair prey by all the bride's relations. This results in endless disputes. Payments made are often repudiated by the recipient. The amount agreed upon is constantly matter for argument, and argument ends in fighting, raids on one another and sometimes a long drawn out feud.

Kingsley's Love For His Wife.
Even a brief holiday at the seaside was to Charles Kingsley too long an absence from his wife. "This place, tis perfect," he wrote on one occasion, "but it seems a dream and imperfect without you. Blessed be God for the rest, though I never before felt the loneliness of being without the beloved being whose every look and word and motion is the keynote of my life. People talk of love ending at the altar foils!"

English Fish Laws.
Fish, because of its tendency rapidly to decompose, holds a peculiar position among foods. In England it is the subject of a special act of parliament. So long ago as 1628 men knew the evil consequences resulting from eating mackerel of uncertain post-mortem age, so they passed an act providing that except during the hours of divine service this fish could be sold on Sunday. That act has never been repealed.

All Full.
"Sister and brederen," said an old dandy in testimony meeting, "Ah jes wants to git to hebbin and squire-eze down into one of dem back seats."
"Nar, nar, brudder," said a deacon who had just come in; "dem back seats been fulled up long 'go."—Exchange.

What She Will Sometimes Admit.
"Does your wife ever admit that she is wrong in an argument?"
"No. The nearest she ever comes to it is to say that I'm not as big a chump as I look."—Detroit Free Press.

How He Stopped.
"How did the doctor persuade you to give up smoking?"
"Made his bill so big I couldn't afford to buy any more tobacco."—Milwaukee Sentinel.
