

Furniture Made to Order

With the installation of my new wood working machinery I now have complete facilities for MAKING ALL KINDS OF FURNITURE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE AND AT A REASONABLE PRICE. If you want anything in this line call and let us talk it over. I do all kinds of IRON WORK and BLACKSMITHING also at my factory on the corner of 8th and E streets.

G. W. DAVIES

The Old Pioneer Blacksmith of Redmond

Night Train Service Daily THROUGH BETWEEN Central Oregon and Portland

BEGINNING SUNDAY, JUNE 22, 1913

OREGON TRUNK RY.
CENTRAL OREGON LINE

TOURIST SLEEPING CARS AND FIRST CLASS COACHES

This service is in lieu of the day trains run heretofore. The train will leave Bend 8:30 p.m., Deschutes 8:45 p.m., Redmond 9:10 p.m., Terrebonne 9:24 p.m., Culver 10:02 p.m., Metolius 10:20 p.m., Madras 10:30 p.m., Mecca 11:08 p.m., Maupin 12:40 a.m., Sherar 1:08 a.m., arrive Portland 8:10 a.m.

Leave Portland 7:00 p.m., arrive Sherar 3:03 a.m., Maupin 3:26 a.m., Mecca 5:18 a.m., Madras 6:00 a.m., Metolius 6:13 a.m., Culver 6:28 a.m., Terrebonne 7:08 a.m., Redmond 7:23 a.m., Deschutes 7:43 a.m., Bend 8:00 a.m.

Connections made in Portland to and from Willamette Valley and Puget Sound Points.

Fares and schedules and details will be furnished on application or by letter.

W. C. WILKES, Asst. Gen. Frt. & Pass. Agt.

R. H. CROZIER, Asst. Gen. Pass. Agt.

H. BAUKOL, Agent, Redmond, Oregon.

S. D. FOX & CO.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars

Hotel Redmond Bar

LOVE'S MAGIC

By AGNES G. BROGAN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1913.

JOEL had fallen into a habit of slavish obedience to Diana's every whim since the day that his mother had brought the orphaned baby home to live at Burton House. Diana had never been an object of charity, but the small annuity left her needed careful management in order to make it suffice for all needs.

When Diana was a young schoolgirl it had been an easy matter to contribute an occasional frock or ribbon to her modest wardrobe, but as she grew older her dark eyes were quick to discover and quick to resent these kindly deceptions. She had early evinced a decided talent for the art which had been her father's profession, and her dreams of a future career were as rose colored as his had been when that promising career had ended so briefly—at its very beginning.

"Count it again, Joel," she said, "and see if we cannot economize in some way to pay for painting lessons."

Joel smiled in his patient way and went over the list again. "Can you do with a frock or two less?" he asked.

"No well regulated young person needs more than two dresses in summer," Diana answered promptly—"both white and one always fresh and clean." So she ran back to confer with Joel's crippled mother upon the subject of painting lessons.

Diana made remarkable progress in her art studies, and when school days became a thing of the past the girl started in with a determined purpose, on what she had termed "her life's work."

When Diana's first painting received its finishing stroke it was Joel who proudly took it into the city and who arranged to have it most advantageously exhibited. After what seemed an interminable time of waiting a telegram came for Joel. The painting had been sold—actually sold—and an order left for a second picture. The price paid was very small. "But," said Diana, "what has money to do with a wonderful, beautiful miracle like this?" So Joel hastened to town to settle the bargain, and Diana turned into a sunny being, who laughed and sang and painted many pictures, disposing of each one with unheard of success. Joel gave up his customary trip to Washington that year, to stay and rejoice with her. She came to him one evening as he sat smoking an after dinner cigar.

"I would like to talk to you, Mr. Sphinx," she said. Joel smiled. He was accustomed to Diana's teasing. "I have been thinking, Joel," the girl continued, "that I waste much time traveling back and forth to the city to attend my art classes and could really accomplish more if my studio were there."

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

Diana made no response, and with one backward regretful glance Joel hurried away. When he returned a few moments later his voice was strangely brusque. "Mr. Fox came to see me concerning your painting, 'Love's Magic,' Diana. He wishes to purchase it."

"Joel!" the girl cried reproachfully.

"It is quite true," Joel repeated. "I would not deceive you further." Then his face darkened. "No one shall buy the picture," he said passionately. "It is mine."

Diana's eyes widened. Then, half laughing, half crying, she ran toward the door. "Don't you see what this means to me, Joel?" she said breathlessly. "I can paint pictures. I can... Before he could speak she had disappeared down the stairway.

When Joel entered the parlor the young millionaire stood looking down into Diana's glowing face. "I am an ardent art enthusiast," he was saying, "but no conception of the old masters has ever appealed to me as your beautiful fancy has done. I must have the picture, Miss Dale. You shall name your own price."

Diana turned with pretty dignity to Joel. "Mr. Burton managed my business affairs," she replied.

"I must refer to an authority before putting a price upon the picture," Joel said slowly. "I have not sufficient knowledge to speak on the subject of art. I can only feel its beauty."

Mr. Fox looked slightly amused.

"The painting, 'Love's Magic,' is not for sale," Diana said suddenly. "If you will give me a trial, Mr. Fox, I will paint another picture, which shall have my best effort, and you may judge of its merit."

"Love's Magic" joined the array of paintings in the garret room, and, ignoring Joel's humble gratitude, Diana returned to her city studio to labor in a fever of joyous inspiration while to the faithful ones at Burton house came frequent scribbled notes.

"I am earning my living," she wrote to Joel. "It is necessary since a certain generous sphinx is no longer allowed to deceitfully provide my income."

"The days passed Joel felt vaguely troubled, for every note bore reference in some way to the young man whom Diana grew to regard as her benefactor.

ture. "Nothing," she answered laughingly; "my art must carry me through." Diana worked desperately at her masterpiece, and when at last it was completed Joel stood before the painting lost in awed admiration. The words of praise he longed to say refused to be spoken.

"Diana," he pleaded gently, "come home with me now and rest." "Yes, Mr. Sphinx," she answered with unexpected meekness, and while Joel attended to the exhibiting of her painting, Diana reveled among the flowers in the old homestead garden.

Joel's mother called to him from the veranda one afternoon. "Have you seen Diana?" she asked. "I have missed her for some time."

"No," he replied; "I have not seen her." A sudden presentiment paled his face beneath its coat of tan. With nervous haste he produced a key ring, though he knew instinctively that the key he sought would not be there.

After all these months of watchfulness he had left it carelessly in an open door, and this open door would reveal to the girl the futility of all her bright hopes. Hastily entering the house he ascended a rear stairway and, reaching the second landing, passed on again to an attic door. The boards resounded beneath his tread as he crossed to a door which led into a small gable room.

Joel hesitated a moment as though to gain courage, then stepped inside. Upon the four walls finished to receive them hung many paintings in costly frames. They were all here—Diana's pictures—not one missing, from the first crude sketch to her latest triumph, and crouched upon the floor, her slight figure shaken by noiseless sobs, lay the little artist.

"Diana," the man whispered.

She turned upon him fiercely. "So this is what you have been doing all along," she cried, "buying my paintings and hiding them here in your garret, while I have been living upon your money. Why did you let me go on believing in myself—in my art—when I am but a hopeless failure?"

"It has all been a mistake, Diana," Joel said unsteadily—"just another one of my blundering ways of trying to make you happy, and you must know that every picture was given a fair chance before I finally—brought it here."

"Oh, I am sure of that!" Diana answered and laughed mockingly. "But you had no right to deceive me, Joel—no right to force upon me money which I did not earn."

"I have spent a great deal of money in my life for things which gave no pleasure," the man answered gently, "while each picture of yours, Diana, has been worth more than twice its price to me."

The girl sighed and motioned toward the pictures. "My career has begun and ended here," she said.

Joel took one step toward her, then paused. "Diana," he said tensely, "marry me and I will help you realize your ambition."

"No, Joel," she said wearily, "you must invent some other plan to help me out of my difficulty."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously.

"Yes, I do," Diana interrupted. "Listen before you object. Old Nurse Lizzie could go along to take care of me, we're there."

"A gentleman to see you, sir," called Lizzie from the threshold, and Joel put out his hand to receive a square white card.

"Strange," he muttered. "What business can Harold J. Fox, the millionaire, have with me?"

"You don't mean"—he began incredulously