

The Store Where Your Wants Will Be Filled

Cole's Original Air Tight Heater

FOR WOOD AND LIGHTER FUEL

WE CARRY A FULL LINE OF THE ABOVE STOVES—ALL STYLES AND SIZES—BOTH FOR WOOD AND COAL. THEY ARE FUEL SAVERS, BUILT ABSOLUTELY AIR TIGHT AND MADE TO LAST.

NO FIRES TO KINDLE COLD MORNINGS.

GUARANTEED TO HOLD FIRE OVER NIGHT WITH DRY WOOD.

TO REMAIN ALWAYS AIR TIGHT.

TO HEAT A ROOM FROM ZERO TO 70 DEGREES IN FIVE MINUTES.

THE COMBUSTION IS SO PERFECT THAT ASHES ARE REMOVED ONLY ONCE IN SIX WEEKS.

THE MOST SATISFACTORY WOOD HEATER EVER MANUFACTURED.

IF YOU WILL GIVE A COLE'S HOT BLAST A TRIAL YOU WILL NEVER USE ANY OTHER KIND.

Steel Ranges

WE ALSO CALL YOUR ATTENTION TO OUR FINE LINE OF STEEL RANGES AT ALL PRICES, IF YOU ARE WANTING TO BUY THAT KIND OF A STOVE. IN THE REGULAR COOKING STOVE LINE WE ALSO HAVE A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF DIFFERENT KINDS AND MAKES THAT IT WILL BE TO YOUR ADVANTAGE TO LOOK OVER WHEN WANTING ANYTHING OF THIS KIND.

Hardware and Implements

WE WANT TO CALL YOUR ATTENTION TO THE FACT THAT WE CARRY THE LARGEST STOCK OF HARDWARE AND AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS OF ANY CONCERN IN CENTRAL OREGON. AT OUR STORE YOU CAN SECURE JUST WHAT YOU WANT—FROM THE SMALLEST PIECE OF HARDWARE TO THE LARGEST AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT. WE HAVE EVERYTHING FOR THE FARMER IN THE IMPLEMENT LINE, AND EVERYTHING FOR THE BUILDER IN THE WAY OF LIGHT AND HEAVY HARDWARE

Agricultural Implements

WE CARRY IN STOCK DEERING AND JOHN DEERE BINDERS, DEERING, DAIN AND ADRIANCE MOWERS, IN EITHER 4½ OR 5-FOOT CUT; MILWAUKEE, DEERING AND JOHN DEERE HAY RAKES OF ALL SIZES. A COMPLETE STOCK OF REPAIRS CARRIED FOR ALL THOSE MACHINES.

WE CARRY THE FAMOUS JOHN DEERE PLOWS—THE BEST ON EARTH. FULL LINE OF THEM—WALKING AND RIDING. EVERY PLOW GUARANTEED TO GIVE ABSOLUTE SATISFACTION. OLIVER CHILLED PLOW LINE, BOTH WALKING AND RIDING.

BEAR IN MIND THAT WE ALSO CARRY A FULL STOCK OF DRILLS—THE CELEBRATED VAN BRUNT AND THE SUPERIOR DRILLS.

AT ANY TIME WHEN YOU ARE IN NEED OF ANY IMPLEMENTS, CALL ON US, CONSULT US. WE WILL GIVE YOU THE BENEFIT OF MANY YEARS OF EXPERIENCE.

ALFRED MUNZ REDMOND, OREGON THE LARGEST HARDWARE AND IMPLEMENT HOUSE IN CENTRAL OREGON

HIS RISE TO POWER

By Henry Russell Miller, Author of
"The Man Higher Up"

Copyright, 1911, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

CHAPTER XII.

Locusts and Wild Honey.

A SON of the old regime returning to New Chelsea after four years would have found vast improvements wrought. Nor was the prosperity thus attested merely the crumbs from the table of thriving Plumville. It was all New Chelsea's own, and it had come by the avenue of Stephen Hampden's speculation, for the coal company, despite the rules of the game, was a success for all concerned. Already it was paying dividends.

But a great deal more than a "boom" can happen in four years. That number of cycles saw William Murchell's power shaken, totter and crash to the earth. Most people credited this to the craft of Mark Sherrod, state treasurer and the new minister, and his able lieutenant, Governor Parrott. Murchell would have placed the credit or blame elsewhere. Had he had the habit of discussing his mistakes he would have added a year to our calculation and said that the initial blow had been struck at his power when on a certain June day, in company with Jim Sheehan, he had sought to press a bright faced young man into his service.

If it was your good fortune to be a resident of New Chelsea at that time you will remember how John Dunmeade appeared when he was thirty-five—a grave, quiet man, looking older than his years, as carelessly dressed as men are apt to be who are dreaming of big things. His hair was beginning to thin at the temples. He walked with a slight stoop and with less spring—the long, slow stride of a man who thinks much on his feet.

He made it a point, however unhappily his cause was progressing, never to seem downcast. You would leave him, probably thinking it a pity that such an attractive man should be so unpractical and the object of so many bitter and powerful enemies. If the truth must be told, New Chelsea was more than a little disappointed in John Dunmeade.

His health was not always good. He had suffered a serious illness during one winter and, between the duties of office, the cares of a growing private practice and the incessant labors of politics, his body had been sadly overtaxed. He was still district attorney, last trophy of the reform wave that had swept over the shattered machine. Under the leadership of Greene, an ex-gambler and former lieutenant of Sheehan, less obviously the brute and far shrewder than the deposed boss, the Plumville organization had risen from its ashes. He had recaptured all the county offices, except when John, a candidate for re-election, had won through personal popularity and by a scant margin.

Politics is a hard taskmaster. John found poor compensation in the fact that he had become well known throughout the state. The year after the Benton county reform he had joined himself to the cause of Judge Gray, an honest and capable lawyer who dared to ask the old party nomination for governor against the organization's choice. With the judge John made a vigorous stumping campaign in every county of the state. He was new, he was enthusiastic, he was daring. People listened. Parrott was nominated easily according to the "slate."

Judge Dunmeade was not nominated to the supreme court that year; hence the breach of a lifelong friendship, increased bitterness against his son and many I-told-you-so's from Miss Roberta.

But John preached on. He did more than attack. He devised and proffered remedies with a naive disregard of the conservative habit of the American mind that incited mirth in some, apprehension in others and bewilderment in still others. It is not necessary here to enumerate his remedies. They have since become respectable.

He learned in common with other young iconoclasts something of the existence and character and aims of the personal government which lay behind the formal and of the marvelously woven system by which the dominant personalities twisted the form of government to their purpose. Being a young man who thought himself inspired, he was aghast and the more determined to destroy that system. Not wholly lacking a sense of proportion, he realized the temerity of him who undertook such wholesale destruction. But his youthful optimism and faith in the people had not failed. His task was to expound the machine to the people of his state. Always he saw victory just one year ahead.

In those days—to be exact, three years after the destruction of the Sheehan machine—there was strife in the organizations of both parties. Upon the devoted heads of Murchell and Duffy, the respective bosses, hurtled abuse from strange quarters. Anxious cries rang from the deck of the ship Murchell had steered so long. Then the storm burst.

The biennial election of a state treasurer was at hand. There appeared to John one day a plausible gentleman who discussed the troubled waters. He was in a state of righteous indignation. Murchell's domination had continued too long! Patience with his tyrannical ways has ceased to be a virtue. His audacity had been proved by his breach of contract to let Sherrod succeed Beck. And he, the messenger, was glad to say, in confidence, that those able and distinguished patriots and leaders, Mark Sherrod and Philander Parrott, were organizing a revolt and proposed to make the treasurer nomination a test of strength. And they had commissioned him to urge that other able, etc., John Dunmeade, the man who had "licked Murchell in his own back yard," to join the reform. He was deeply hurt when John refused.

Halg, who also had made New Chelsea his legal residence, invented sundry lurid epithets to describe John's folly and urged reconsideration. John shook his head.

"But I thought you wanted to put Murchell out of business?"

"Not Murchell. I've grown past that. I'm rather sorry for him just now. And I'd rather have him run things than Sherrod. It's the institution we've got to destroy—as he told me himself once. Nothing's gained if we substitute one boss for another."

"Then what are you going to do, my destructive friend?"

"Try to slip in between them, I think—put up an independent candidate."

John made his campaign. When the primaries had been held, he was himself astonished to discover that nearly a quarter of the delegates chosen were pledged to his independent candidate. But before daylight on the night before the convention John learned that he had been used to draw delegates from Murchell for Sherrod's purpose; he saw his hand dwindle to a faithful handful.

When the convention met, Sherrod was in control. After the preliminaries John, answering to the roll call of counties, placed his candidate in nomination in a speech that could hardly be heard for jeers and catcalls. It was brought to an abrupt conclusion by a yell from the gallery. "Sit down, sonny. Only money talks in this convention!" Even the delegates joined in the roar of laughter. And then the comp was accomplished. The Parrott-Sherrod candidate was withdrawn and Sherrod himself substituted. Amid confusion that amounted almost to a riot he was nominated.

A nonpartisan candidate was put up that fall. John and Jerry Brent were most active in his support. They made what was said to be a remarkable campaign, and in every county they were met with tremendous enthusiasm. People flocked by thousands to hear them and cheered themselves hoarse as the young orators excoriated the bosses. But on election day the people marched to the polls, voted as they had always done and elected the old party ticket by a majority of more than 100,000.

The campaign fixed John's place firmly in the public mind. This place, one that a practical man would have thought twice before seeking, was won at the cost of much of his buoyant optimism. It almost cost him his life also. A heavy cold contracted during the last days of the campaign eventually settled into a stubborn case of pneumonia. There were many anxious days in the Dunmeade home. Nor was Miss Roberta's anxiety unshared. Through three consecutive nights Hugh Dunmeade never sought his couch, but kept a constant vigil by his son's bedside, listening to the painful breathing and, without protest, to the reproaches of an inner voice. When the Christmas holidays arrived John was still confined to his room.

That winter Senator Murchell varied his program by spending the congressional recess at his legal residence.

And one Sunday morning he came face to face with the judge and Miss Roberta in the vestibule of the Presbyterian church. It was the first meeting in more than two years.

"The doctor tells me John ought to go south and won't. If it's on account of—er—money matters," the senator looked carefully out into the street. "I'll be glad to help out."

"No, sir," the judge put in stiffly. "If John needs money it is my right to provide it." It had not occurred to him before to exercise the right.

"Stuff!" said the senator. "I know how you're fixed, Hugh. You can't afford it. I can."

"We Dunmeades, Senator Murchell, don't accept charity from our political enemies."

"Our political enemies! Have you turned reformer, judge?" Murchell inquired innocently. "I thought you didn't believe in agitation."

"At least my son is an honorable gentleman," the judge retorted. "He doesn't go about deceiving his friends with promises he has no intention of keeping." Here the judge certainly scored.

"John," declared the judge later to Roberta with ill concealed pride, "doesn't need charity from me or any one else. Only justice. He's an honest but misguided man."

Others than Senator Murchell overstepped a custom to spend the Yuletide in New Chelsea. To John, by way of Halg and Miss Roberta, came rumors of a very gay house party on the ridge that had been led by some strange whim to experience the novelty of a country Christmas. One day Miss Roberta brought to him an armful of roses sent by Katherine.

"Aunt Roberta," he said, "you're the worst fraud in Christendom."

"I went to call," she explained, "on Katherine Hampden. They were asking about you and somebody suggested sending flowers. So that little Miss Haines went over the house and got together all they had. Katherine helped her," she added. "She suggested it."

"That was very good of her."

"John, she isn't engaged yet. Why?"

"Is that a conundrum? Probably, I should say, because she hasn't found any one with the required combination of talents and possessions. Or it may be she has found him and he—let us not be too ungalant—doesn't know it."

"John, it isn't too late for you."

"It isn't too—why, my gracious! Aunt Roberta, she likes nice, sleek, prosperous gentlemen. Honestly now, you could never fit that description to me, could you?" He laughed very heartily.

She looked at him keenly, rose to her feet and went downstairs to procure a vase for the flowers. When she returned, he was staring oddly at them. What she read in his expression was not at all mirth.

"Suppose," he said abruptly, "you take the flowers downstairs. They—the odor is a little too heavy."

"I thought," she said quietly, "your laugh was overdone. John, how much had your politics to do with—it?"

"A little. She thinks I am a fool. I've found," he added, "that that opinion isn't peculiar to her."

"John," she pleaded wistfully, "why won't you quit? You've done enough."

"Down in your heart, do you want me to quit, Aunt Roberta?"

"Politics has been the ruination of our family. We Dunmeades are all fools!"

"We Dunmeades! You know you never did a foolish thing in your life, Aunt Roberta," he smiled.

"Yes, I did," she answered grimly. "I—I like your kind of foolishness."

"Aunt Roberta," he said, with a flash of the boyishness he had almost lost, "you're the worst humbug in Christendom. You think you're crabbed and cranky and practical, when really you're just a generous, great hearted, romantic old dear. You think you've missed something big and wonderful and you're afraid I'm missing it, too. Maybe you have. Maybe I am. But there are more ways than one of finding romance and happiness. I am not an unhappy man."

"Are you telling the truth?" she asked quietly.

The flash of boyishness subsided. "I think I am," he answered gravely.

But afterward, when she had gone, he carefully gathered up the fallen petals and tossed them into the fire. He watched them quickly shrivel and disappear.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Forerunner.

H HE went south. The doctor had prescribed three months' rest. John was back in New Chelsea in one, preparing with dogged energy to begin a new campaign against the state machine.

The campaign that followed was but a weary repetition of other years, without the stimulus of hope. The spasms of enthusiasm past, the people had sunk back into habitual lack of interest. The only notable political feature of that year was the quiet contest within the organization between the old boss and the new, a struggle in which Murchell was forced to yield.

When a man sees the best years of his life slipping away with no accomplishment, when he has suffered not only denunciation and misrepresentation, which are not easy to bear, but also treachery and ridicule, which are harder, and misunderstanding and indifference from the people he is trying to serve, which are hardest of all, he cannot be greatly blamed for wanting sometimes to "chuck the game," as Halg put it to John one evening in early winter. The bantering friendship between them, grown deeper as the years passed, had been worth more to John than he quite realized.

"Why don't you chuck the game? You're further back than you were four