PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY COURT

A special session of the County Court convened at the court house in Prineville, Oregon, at 3 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, June 3, 1914. When present G. Springer, judge, presiding; R. H. Bayley, commissioner; Frank Elkins, sheriff, and Warren Brown, county clerk.

Whereupon the following proceedings were had, to-wit:

Ordered that a widow's pension of $10 per month be allowed Mrs. M. R. Reed.

Ordered that a warrant in the sum of $117.62 be issued in favor of George H. Brewster, for bill presented at March term and disallowed then because of failure to itemize same.

Ordered that a warrant on the road fund in the sum of $250 be issued to W. M. Ferrell, and also a warrant for $250 be issued to W. E. Claypool; said money to be used to complete work already begun in their respective districts.

In the matter of the McKenzie road: Whereas, Crook county is pledged to co-operate with the forest service in the improvement of the McKenzie road, and the people of Bend, Redmond, Sisters and Prineville are guaranteeing to carry the indebtedness until May, 1915, in case it is required to protect the county's finances, it is ordered that work may continue on same. (See order.)

The request for money for road improvement in the vicinity of Redmond and Bend presented. Judge objects on ground that if the money is expended it will exceed the budget for general improvement.

Request of the Commercial Club of Redmond for $250 for the Potato Show for 1914 presented by Mr. Rodman.

(Signed) G. Springer, judge; E. H. Bayley, commissioner; Willis W. Brown.

WHEN TO CUT ALFALEA

There is a right time to cut alfalfa for obtaining the most hay during the season and for the good of the crop. Many reasons are given by men raising alfalfa for the time they cut it for hay, and possibly the man who has no reason, but cuts his crop on the same date each year, is as near right as many of the others. However, there is a certain stage at which you may get the maximum "feed" in your alfalfa hay and not injure the following crop.

If we cut alfalfa too young, we get a larger percentage of water and less dry matter and the hay shrinks badly. If we cut the crop too late, we not only get "stemmy" hay, but also lose valuable feed in shattered leaves and injure the following crop. In case of a backward spring or attacks by insects, the first crop may not make a No. 1 hay, but it is necessary that it be harvested, whatever its condition. In order that the following crop may not be injured and may make a "good" crop. The same may be true, but seldom the same year, of a second crop when drought or insects set it back.

The time to cut first year alfalfa—if there are many weeds in the field—is when the weeds begin to shade the alfalfa, but do not cut too low. Never cut new alfalfa too close to the ground. The time to cut the "set" field of alfalfa for hay is when the following crop begins to grow, as indicated by new sprouts from the crown. The crop to be harvested will improve but little under almost any condition after this time and it is best to get it off the ground as soon as possible in order that the following crop may do its best.

It pays to watch for these new sprouts, especially for determining the time for the first cutting. Try it and see.

OUR SOILS NEED MORE HUMUS

Addition of Vegetable Matter Will Increase Fertility

The most of us on farms in this section of the country fail to appreciate the fact that our soil here, before it was cleared and farmed, probably has never grown anything but the sage brush, the juniper and a very little bunch grass. There is practically no vegetable matter or humus in it. No soil can produce a maximum crop when in this condition and, until we add this necessary humus to our soil, we cannot realize the profits from it that we should.

Practically all of our soils today "pack" or "blow" or "wash," and each of these conditions may be remedied by adding humus to the soil so affected. Practically all of our soils at present grow good crops and this indicates the presence of much good plant food in them. However, for maximum growth and production, plants require other conditions than the mere presence of the plant food. They require the presence of both air and water in the soil at the same time and the most of them require the "body" which only decayed organic matter can give to the soil. Most vegetable matter or humus also provides available plant food.

The most efficient and valuable thing that we can use for "building up" our soil is barnyard manure, preferably that well rotted. For our purpose, this manure may be spread on the land at any time and be plowed in at regular plowing. However, barnyard manure is also an invaluable fertilizer if used properly and, for this purpose, should be so handled as to get the full benefit of both the liquid and the solid materials.

The use of green manures will probably prove the most practical on the most of our farms, at present, because of the comparatively few livestock we keep. Green manuring is simply the plowing under of a green crop and any crop, even weeds, may be used for this purpose. Clover, field peas, rye or rape are probably the most practical crops for this purpose in this section and the use of any of these will bring about noticeable results. Even if the crop of field peas or of clover be removed from the land, much humus is added to the soil because of their rank root growth and, if they be harvested for their seed, the stems may be returned to the land and practically the whole of the crop, valuable for humus, be added to the soil.

Few farmers can afford to add the necessary humus to all of their land in one season, but all can add it in some form to at least a small patch each year and gradually build up the whole farm.

DRY CREEKERS FEEL GOOD OVER THEIR WATER SUPPLY

Dry Creekers are jubilant over the fact that R. R. Rimpler struck a good flow of water at 228 feet, says the Prineville Journal. He has 65 feet of excellent water. Everyone of the 35 families in that section was interested in the well, not financially of course, but whether or not water could be obtained at a reasonable depth. This well settles the question, at least for domestic use. Heretofore shallow springs furnished the water supply. A co-operative effort will be made this summer to build a ditch to take water out of Dry creek during the months of January, February, March and April to cover most of the 10,000 acres available for agricultural purposes.

ter examined thoroughly and a verdict was brought in by the jury holding the father responsible for the doing away with the child. A charge of murder in the first degree will probably be brought against him.

The mother as yet is not known to be an accessory to the crime, though evidence is very strong to the effect that she knew that the crime was being committed, and as a former child of this couple had some time before died under peculiar circumstances, has a tendency to show that both are equally guilty. Her condition is such that she was taken to the Poindexter hospital at Prineville for medical attention, and also to be under the charge of the sheriff.

Drastic measures were proposed for the handling of the father before being taken to Prineville, but Sheriff Elkins prevented any disturbance, and with the aid of some deputies the prisoner was landed safely in the county jail, where he is being carefully watched.

The couple have been in this country about a year, and at the time of coming to Central Oregon they walked most of the way, and soon after arriving took the job of cooking for the mill. Their former home having been some place in California, coming from there to this section. It is an evident fact that their future home will be at Salem for a time at least.

In a conversation with the sheriff this afternoon it was learned that Sheldon had made some confessions as to his actions on that night and that in the opinion of the officials he would come through and tell all about it in the next few days. The preliminary hearing will not be held for several days, until the wife recovers sufficiently to be questioned carefully.

Hollow of Her Hand

For reasons of his own, he did not attempt to draw her into the conversation, fascinated as he was by the study of that beautiful, emotionless face. Once he had the queer sensation of feeling, rather than seeing, a haunted look in her eyes, but he put it down to fancy on his part.

And Leslie babbled on in blissful ignorance of, not to say disregard for, this strange ghost at the feast, for, to Booth's mind, the ghost of Challis Wrardall was there.

Turning to Miss Castleton with a significant look in his eyes, meant to call her attention to Mrs. Wrardall, he was amazed to find that every vertigo of color had gone from the girl's face. She was listening to Wrardall and replying in monosyllables, but that she was aware of the other woman's abstraction was not for an instant to be doubted. Suddenly, after a quick glance at Sara's face, she looked squarely into Booth's eyes, and he saw in hers an expression of actual concern, if not alarm.

Leslie was in the middle of a sentence when Sara laughed aloud, with out excuse or reason. The next instant she was looking from one to the other in a dazed sort of way, as if coming out of a dream.

Wrardall turned scarlet. There had been nothing in his remarks to call for a laugh, he was quite sure of that. Flushing slightly, she murmured something about having thought of an amusing story, and begged him to go on, she wouldn't be rude again.

He had little rest for continuing the subject and sullenly disposed of it in a word or two.

"What the devil was there to laugh at, Brandy?" he demanded of his friend after the women had left them later. Hetty had gone upstairs with Mrs. Wrardall, her arm clasped tightly about the older woman's waist.

"I dare say she was thinking about you falling a mile or two," said Booth pleasantly.

But he was perplexed.
