

Business

But she knows plenty of other local restaurateurs who are struggling.

“They’re getting to the breaking point,” she said. “There are small business owners deep in debt now. Whether they’ll ever be able to come out is in question.”

Endicott said he recently spoke with the owner of Madaline’s Grill, who told the mayor he had to spend $500-600 daily on propane to allow for outdoor dining in chilly winter weather. And the restaurant’s profit margins have become extremely thin.

“He said, ‘I have had no money in my pockets in my restaurant in months, because I’m giving all the money to my staff,’” Endicott said Madaline’s owner told him.

The owner of Madaline’s declined an interview.

If restaurants and gyms in Redmond are eventually able to reopen, Endicott ensured that he and city staff would put pressure on those businesses to follow COVID-19 protocols like mask-wearing and social distancing.

A few local restaurants, notably Kevista Coffee in Bend, have allegedly not required staff or customers to wear masks and faced state fines.

“I would certainly go down and meet with (owners) personally and say, ‘look, we’re fighting for you to get this open, but you have to meet us halfway,’” Endicott said. “The same entrepreneurial spirit you show on how you run your business, show that same level of commitment to mask wearing and safety measures.”

Not all Redmond residents think asking the governor for more lenient restaurant rules is smart.

Married couple Richard Lance and Leanne Latterell sent the city council a lengthy letter with many objections to the council’s proposed letter to Brown.

Lance — a retired social worker and a Redmond resident for 40 years — told The Bulletin that he’s worried allowing indoor dining could cause increase the spread of COVID-19 in his community. People have to take their masks off to eat and drink, and they often forget to put them back on after their meal is finished, he said.

“I don’t think a lot of people in Redmond are concerned about health and safety,” Lance told The Bulletin Monday.

Lance understands some small businesses are struggling — he and his wife live near downtown Redmond and frequently patronize local stores and restaurants, he said. But he believes asking for exceptions to Brown’s mandates isn’t the solution.

“It’s not that we want local business to fail, or have completely rigid rules,” he said. “But saying, ‘we don’t need these mandates’ ... I don’t think that’s responsible.”

Michael L. Mitchell

December 15, 1949 – November 15, 2020

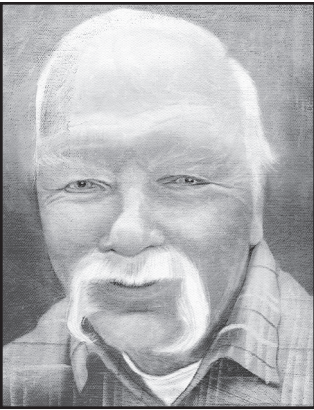

Michael L. Mitchell (better known as simply “Mike”) suffered a fatal heart attack at his beloved mountain home in Placerville, Idaho, one month shy of his seventy-first birthday. In the final years of his life, Mike was reunited with his high school sweetheart, Mary Lou Standley of Redmond, Oregon. As a result, Mike divided his time between Placerville and Redmond. After retiring from OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration), Mike worked as both an employee and volunteer for Redmond Area Parks and Recreation District, supervising and coaching sports leagues for both adults and youth. He cherished the relationships he built with other staff, volunteers, and participants during his years there.

Athletics were always a major part of Mike’s life. He played baseball and football for Madison High School in Portland, Oregon, then went on to play both sports at Oregon College of Education (now Western Oregon University) in Monmouth, Oregon. He earned a master’s in physical education and taught and coached in the Marion and Polk County schools for 10 years, prior to moving into a career with OSHA.

Another great passion in Mike’s life was his desire to reflect the heart of Jesus to all those he encountered. Mike and Mary Lou regularly attended Highland Baptist Church in Redmond, Oregon, in-person before the pandemic and online during the pandemic. Mike shined the light and love of his Savior in how he lived each moment of his time on Earth.

Mike loved deeply and was deeply loved by all who knew him. He leaves behind his high school sweetheart Mary Lou Standley, daughter Amanda Ying and her family, daughter Tiffany La Grange and her family, beloved Aunt Rosemary, and many cousins, as well as many others who were blessed to have known Mike. He is truly and deeply missed.
