THE RIVALRY IS REAL

Ridgeview survives scare from a resurgent Redmond High

BY BRIAN RATHBONE
The Bulletin

REDMOND — Leading 2-1 in sets, with a fifth set looking as though it was all too certain, Randi Viggiano called a timeout trailing 23-21 in the fourth set, hoping to refocus her team to close out a Redmond High team that would not go down easy.

“We had to take a couple of timeouts just to regain our composure and remember to play our game,” said Viggiano, the Ridgeview volleyball coach. “We just had to refocus and get back to what our task was; that is being aggressive and never letting up. We don’t play not to lose, we play to win.”

The Ravens did just that, winning five of the next six points to take the fourth set and escape the Redmond High gym with a 3-1 victory (25-19, 16-25, 25-22, 26-24) over their intratown rival Sept. 21.

The win kept the Ravens’ 18-win streak over the Panthers alive. Ridgeview has yet to lose on the volleyball court to Redmond since Ridgeview opened in 2012.

Although, in the first matchup between the rivals this year, each team entered in unfamiliar spots. Redmond is off to its best start in recent years and climbed into the top-10 rankings of last week’s OSAA Class 5A coaches poll at No. 6. While Ridgeview, the 5A state champion in 2019, fell out of the top 10 after being ranked third in the preseason polls.

Rankings aside, the game still needed to be played. And on the court, in front of a hostile crowd fueled by dueling student sections, it felt at times as though the continuation of the streak was in doubt and there would be a new top dog in Redmond volleyball.

“When we were neck to neck the whole set I didn’t know how it was going to go,” said Ridgeview sophomore Ellie Owens. “But luckily we pulled through. We regrouped ourselves, took a deep breath and said that we got this. We just had to go out and play our game.”

While the end result was a familiar one, it was hardly a familiar match between the Ravens and the Panthers. There has been a wide gap in on-court success between the two volleyball programs.

“It makes for an exciting night when you don’t know who is going to take it,” said second-year Redmond coach Katie Karcher. “We just restarted as a program. I set the bar high. I put in rules and expectations and the kids bought into it, which is a really big deal.”

One streak did end for Redmond on Sept. 21 against Ridgeview, and it came in the second set when the Panthers won rather convincingly, 25-16. The last time the Panthers won a single set against the Ravens was back in October 2015 — a total of 31 sets.

Perhaps the set Karcher is most proud of was the third. It started off similarly to sets of past years between the two teams. Ridgeview jumped out to a comfortable 16-8 lead, but the Panthers continued to chip away and before long the lead had been cut to 23-21.

While the Ravens ultimately won two of the next three points, it was a set that revealed the type of team Redmond is becoming.

“I told them that we have to be mentally strong,” Karcher said.

“And that you can’t worry about who is on the other side of the court. They turned it on and went on a big run.”

The rival schools will meet for a second time at Ridgeview on Oct. 12.

Dual Language continues to grow

BY SHEILA MILLER

Redmond School District Public Information Officer

With all that is going on with COVID-19 and schools right now, sometimes it’s useful to remember that despite all the distractions, there are kids going to school every day, learning and growing and having fun.

At Hugh Hartman Elementary School, many of those students are enrolled in the Redmond School District’s dual language program, learning in both English and Spanish. The program, which started in the 2017-18 school year with two kindergarten classes, has gained a grade level each year. This 2021-22 school year, the school has 10 dual language classrooms in kindergarten through fourth grades, as well as five English-only classrooms. By 2029-30, the Redmond School District expects to fully implement the program in K-12 classrooms.

The program is designed to increase academic achievement, develop bilingualism and biliteracy, as well as cross-cultural understanding. In the Redmond School District’s program, 50 percent of instruction takes place in Spanish and 50 percent takes place in English — with specific subjects taught in each language. Research shows that students enrolled in dual language programs achieve at or above the level of students in non-dual language classes by the time they reach middle school.

Right now, Hugh Hartman Elementary is in the process of developing a dual-language library with appropriate resources for the program’s students. Principal Lisa Flora-Burgher and STEAM teacher Cynthia Hopkins recently attended the Rotary Club of Redmond’s lunch meeting to share information about the library, and to thank the Rotarians for a $1,000 donation to develop the library.

It’s not easy to start a library from scratch (Hugh Hartman was previously the Redmond Early Learning Center, serving all kindergartners). Add in the challenge of finding books in both English and Spanish, and the planning team — including several regional librarians and other partners — have their work cut out for them. Deschutes Public Library has been a tremendous partner in helping develop the library, providing assistance with purchasing and collection development, among other useful help. Thanks to a grant from the American Rescue Plan Act that district librarian Pia Allende applied for, the school will be able to host monthly, themed library nights to engage families to access the newly developed library and all its resources.

So far, the school has used a variety of grant funds to secure 2,000 books. The goal is that by 2026, the library will have an inventory of 10,000 books, with on-site and mobile collections that will reflect student, family and staff demographics. Hartman doesn’t just want to have a library for its own students, but for the entire district to enjoy. It also hopes to have a circulation system in partnership with the Deschutes Public Library and a dedicated, trained staff, and to serve as a family support, because we know many adults and families are also working to develop their personal bilingual/biliteracy skills.

In the meantime, this month the school’s new library furniture will be delivered, giving families, students and staff a more comfortable place to enjoy the school’s burgeoning library collection. We are excited about the program’s continued growth.
