Jan. 5, 1922 — Council names marshal

Earl Malkson was elected city marshal to succeed Albert Julian and R.E. Guenther when chosen water works superintendent at a meeting of the City Council Tuesday evening. The salaries in each instance were fixed at $1,500 a year with the stipulation that automobiles should be furnished by the officials at private expense.

Residence outside of the city which made difficult the performance of his duty to the city was given by Julian as a reason for his resignation.

Jan. 2, 1947 — Growers ask city to act as agent

Directors of the central Oregon Potato Growers association met in the county agent's office Tuesday morning and decided to ask the city of Redmond to act as agent for the growers in bidding for the purchase of 12 airbase buildings from the War Assets administration.

The Potato Growers association is among several local groups interested in purchasing various of the 34 buildings being offered for public sale. If the growers' bid is successful, their buildings will be used as a permanent farm labor camp. Carl Coad presided at Tuesday's meeting.

Dec. 29, 1971 — Central Oregon eyed for NASA project

mond City Council last night to introduce himself, and ended up revealing that Central Oregon is one of three areas in the state under consideration for a National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) project.

The project would involve U-2 high altitude aerial photography, combined with data available through local, state and federal agencies in the area. A single photo might cover an entire county.

The area chosen must have varied topography and agencies willing to assist NASA, related Reeck, who said he got the impression that this area was being considered favorably. A range management specialist from Oregon State University, which would receive $75,000 for the project, was in Central Oregon last week exploring local possibilities.

Reeck, who officially is an administrative assistant to the Deschutes County Commission, but has been acting as coordinator of the Central Oregon intergovernmental council, also asked that Mayor Gerold Barrett name an alternative to attend COIG meetings in his absence. Councilman Buck Kidd was chosen. At the next COIG meeting, Jan. 17, delegates will consider which is most needed for the tri-county area — a housing study or a transportation study.

During the short council meeting which proceeded Reeck's presentation, unanimous authorization was given to:

- Retaining Clark & Groff consulting engineers, at a cost of $1,350, to design and recommend improvements in the heating and filtering system at the municipal swimming pool and to the heating system at

City Hall;

- Establishing an account to accumulate funds for improving and expanding the city water system, with revenue to come from hook up fees and possibly from annual operating budgets;
- Setting the water hook-up fee at $200 plus cost, with residents outside the city doing their own excavating.

Jan. 1, 1997 — Terrebonne to get bank

As early as the spring, Terrebonne and Crooked River

Ranch residents could save themselves some driving miles with the opening of a local bank.

The Prineville bank plans to open a 1,500-square-foot branch office in Terrebonne. The bank will anchor a small mall scheduled for construction at the corner of B Avenue and Highway 97, north of the BP station.

The Prineville bank is waiting for regulatory approval from the state before formally announcing its plans, but it hopes to open by March or April.

Marketing research found the site attractive because of the large population base in Crooked River Ranch and the area surrounding Terrebonne, according to vice president Todd Vallie.

The branch will be a full-service operation, including drive-up teller, safe deposit boxes and ATMs.

The proposed Terrebonne branch fits the bank's niche, Vallie said.

"We formed in Prineville in the late 1970s and early '80s for the purpose of being a small local bank," he said. "We are excited about being invited into Terrebonne."

The bank also has branches in Bend and La Pine.

That local personal touch is what will attract customers, Vallie said.

All Prineville bank branches have lending officers on site with authority to make loan decisions, he said. "Even if the loan request is above their limits, it only goes to Prineville, not Los Angeles," he said.
