Time and air run out for a drowning girl in 1997

Sept. 28, 1922 — From "Local Happenings"

Grandma Mendenhall of Opal City is visiting here this week with her grandson, A.W. Mendenhall. Although 80 years of age, Mrs. Mendenhall is as spry as a cricket.

Someone is moving a wood shed somewhere from behind the Munz hardware store. We understand that someone is moving it to someplace in the country. That is all the data we have on the subject.

Henry Howard and mother were in Redmond Monday looking over our rapidly growing little city.

The carload of Lizzies received by the Redmond Garage less than ten days ago are all sold out, which means more production for Henry.

Oct. 2, 1947 — Reserve officers plan military ball

Final plans for the annual military ball were announced by Dee Haines of Bend at a special meeting of the Central Oregon chapter of the Reserve Officers association of the United States held at the Pine Tavern Wednesday night.

The military ball has, for many years, been the opening social function of the winter season. This year's affair, which will be formal, will be held at the Pilot Butte Inn ballroom Friday, October 10, and it is scheduled to be getting promptly at 9 p.m. Reserve officers and former offi-

Oct. 4, 1972 — Enrollment at 3% a COCC

Registration figures compiled at the end of the first week of fall term classes at Central Oregon community college show enrollment up about 3 per cent over the last year at the same time, according to David Habura, dean of instruction.

The report lists a reimbursable full-time equivalency enrollment in vocational education of programs of 347.80 as compared to 340.15 last year. Enrollment in college transfer programs is 576.80 as compared to 556.4 last year.

As of yesterday morning, Redmond coordinator Kay Mathison reported that some 180 persons were enrolled in 17 adult education classes — compared to about 110 classes during fall term last year. Additional registrations are being accepted by phoning 548-8920 mornings.

fades as it slips from his fingers.

Tashina stares at the knife drifting into the Merc below her as her chin length hair floats in front of her face. The refrain that began when the car swerved across the road leaks through her brain again: "I'm going to die. I'm going to die."

Through a darkening haze Tashina senses 18-year-old Tyson Reedy outside the car. She feels him pulling at her, trying to lift her out. Then, he's gone.

Tashina gasps for air once more before the blackness takes her away.

Every year thousands of people find themselves in life-threatening accidents. No one plans for such things. No one expects the whims of fate to inflict them.

But they do.

The American Red Cross almost guarantees that everywhere, sometime, you or someone you love will be involved in a serious accident.

Some people are lucky. Many or not. The difference can be a bystander who knows what to do and has the courage to do it — a passer-by with CPR and first aid training who is in the right place at the right.

These mostly unsung heroes can mean the difference between life and death, a speedy recovery and a much longer healing process.

That's why the 115-year-old Red Cross offers courses in CPR and emergency first aid training week after week, year after year. Annually in Central Oregon, 5,000 people receive this training.

Red Cross officials say it's not nearly enough when accidents such as Tashina's recent ordeal continue to happen.

Oct. 1, 1997 — Time and air run out for a drowning girl

"I'm gonna die," Tashina Hickman thinks as the green water of the Crooked River gushes in through the windows of the overturned Ford LTD.

Groggy, she punches at the seatbelt clasp. Her head hurts. She can't seem to get moving.

Hanging upside down, Tashina, 12, watches her mother, two brothers and two friends scramble out the window.

To the left, movement catches her eye. T.J., her 14-year-old brother, is reaching for her seatbelt, yanking and pulling.

Tashina tries to breathe, once, twice — while T.J. fights his soaked pants to get to his pocket knife. Hope flares as the knife springs from his pocket, then

People in Redmond are being crushed by rising gas, food, and housing prices. As your City Councilor, and a local small business owner, I understand this skyrocketing cost of living is unsustainable for families and businesses alike.

As your City Councilor today, and with your vote in November, I will continue to work to create more affordable housing and job opportunities in Redmond.
