First show airs Oct. 20

By SPOKESMAN STAFF
KPOV High Desert Community Radio has partnered with Bend-Redmond Habitat for Humanity for a three-part "Critical Conversations" podcast series examining the housing crisis in Central Oregon.

"Critical Conversations" is a special KPOV project developed to feature unique perspectives and the courage it takes to "go there," challenging mundane thought and questioning the norm. This series will build awareness through the lens of families struggling with housing and the organization that is building strength, stability and self-reliance through affordable homeownership in our community.

The first of this three-part Critical Conversations series will debut on-air during KPOV's fall membership drive at 4 p.m. on Oct. 20. The conversation features the first Central Oregon family to purchase a home through Bend-Redmond Habitat for Humanity. Listeners will hear directly from the family about their journey and the impact the organization has had on their lives and futures.

"KPOV is honored to partner with Bend-Redmond Habitat for Humanity," said KPOV station manager Bruce Morris in a release. "We are grateful to have the trust of their leadership and participants. Our community needs to hear real conversations about housing instability. These are not nameless individuals, they are our friends, our neighbors and our community members. Together, we are working to humanize the housing crisis, especially as we face an important election coming up in November."

Melissa Kamanya, Bend-Redmond Habitat for Humanity's director of grants management, said that partnering with KPOV provided an opportunity "to shine a light on our housing crisis and reinforce that decent shelter in our beloved community is a matter of conscience and action for all"
