

“Redmond is very pro-business. They understand the benefits of business and that really sets Redmond apart. All the communities in Central Oregon are great, but Redmond really worked hard on that.”

— Steve Bettis, vice president of operations at Medline have in Portland or some of the bigger communities where you’re just a number, not a company or a name that is recognized.”

Sande said Redmond remains a city that takes pride in its business community and likes to do business with people they know and trust.

Looking ahead, Sande doesn’t see business growth slowing down. Older buildings in downtown are getting being renovated to include more residential units on the second or third floors which will bring in more foot traffic, more business, more restaurants and more nightlife to its downtown core.
