A Late Learned Secret.

(Original.)

Eli Mulholland, a bachelor of forty, at 10 o'clock-at night went up three pairs of stairs, opened the door of his rented room and as he entered heaved a deep sigh. It was heard by Lydia Nutter, the landlady's daughter, aged twenty, who wondered what caused it. Had she, too, been forty instead of twenty, without having followed the course dictated by nature—mating and rearing children—she would have understood that if translated into words the sigh would say:

"Oh, this lonely room!"

Eli Mulholland had in his youth chosen athletic sports with which to beguile his leisure hours. He was a man's man rather than a girl's man. He remembered a pair of bright eyes beaming upon him when he had won the champion cup for single sculls. They and the smile that accompanied them were then no more to him than a passing whiff of violets. Now, as he entered his lonely room, he remembered that the girl he had failed to claim was the wife, and mother of children, of the man he had beaten in the race.
He had won the cup, which he had so dearly prized, leaving for his antagonist the girl, whom he had considered merely one of a million. Now the cup was in a vault with other trinkets; the girl was the light of a household.

He remembered another whom he had played with in a double game of tennis, an execrable player, but a soft voiced beauty; how he had saved the game by his skill and activity; how she had received the prize—a silver mounted racket—from his hands, with blushes that told him she would have gladly taken him instead.

These and others with whom he had feared to become entangled contributed their part in that deep drawn sigh, so unintelligible to Lydia Nutter. He was no longer the companion of young people. He had passed the mating period and had not mated.

"What troubled you last night, Mr.
Mulholland, as you went into your room?" asked Lydia the next morning as the bachelor went out to get his lonely breakfast.

"I troubled? What do you mean?"

"You drew such a sad sigh."

As Eli looked into her sympathetic eyes something of two decades before came back to him. Was it too late to save what remained of his life from a loneliness intensified with each passing year? As quickly as the thought came it was banished. Had he stood still for twenty years while others had grown old? He turned to pass out without reply. How could he tell this girl, who when he was her age was scarcely born, that he had wasted his opportunities, and, though he had gained the world, it was worthless; that which he had selfishly thought he wished for himself when attained had shriveled in his hands, since he had no wife or children to bestow it upon?

"When you feel that way again, come down and we'll try to comfort you," said Lydia.

There was a wistful look in his eyes as he closed the door.

That night he sat in the reading room of his club pretending to read the newspapers, while he was watching the clock. He wished to go to the house where he roomed, but he would go neither too late nor too early—not after Lydia had gone to bed, not so early that he would seem to have come to be with her, for that was his intention. He chose half past 9 as the hour most likely to conceal it and, after two hours' watching the clock, left the club. Lydia was in the sitting room with her mother, the mother reading, Lydia at some fancy work.

"I'm in rather early tonight," he said to Lydia. "There was nothing doing at the club. I've brought some playing cards. Would you mind a game?"

Again the smile that greeted him be-minded him of the face that had beamed upon him when he had been an athletic victor. Then it had been accompanied by the flush of victory, the plaudits of thousands. Now it was bestowed upon a lonely soul hungering for sympathy.

They sat down to a game ostensibly of cards, really to one of love. Lydia had admired the stalwart middle aged man whose hair was beginning to turn, but had not dreamed of being the wife of one she regarded so great. Eli clutched at what he regarded a straw to save him from a desolate old age.
Neither believed it possible to win the game, and yet both had already won it. Eli insisted on a stake, sweetmeats, and always contrived to lose. It might all have been arranged at once, but Eli, fearing to spoil his game by haste, thinking that great skill at angling was essential, did not dare declare himself till the winter had passed and the time of the singing birds had come. Then when he had spent months setting his trap he sprung it.

Eli Mulholland is now fifty and his wife thirty. He does not brood over the difference in their ages, for, while when they were married she was but half his age, now she is three-fifths of it. Besides, several curly headed urchins are of far more importance to both. Eli, who at twenty coveted wealth to spend upon himself, is now happy that he has a fair share of it to spend upon his wife and children.

If this experience could be imparted to the young, how many more people would pass a contented old age!

GERTRUDE GO VAN.

Where the Dog is Valued.

In northern France and in Belgium especially the dog is indeed the friend of man. He is made to work. He gets little play except that small amount deemed sufficient to prevent canine dullness, yet he is so loved and so well cared for by his owner that he becomes a most important member of the family. The farmer, the tradesman, the householder, the guardsman of the frontier worships his dog—one of the first things he thinks of when founding his little home. He takes delight in rousing the dog's intelligence and loses no chance of pitting that intelligence against others. Local farmers vie with each other to improve a breed. Dog clubs take up the work, holding exhibitions in villages and towns. Cities challenge neighboring municipalities to contests on the grandest scale.—Wide World Magazine.

don't hurry up and catch on."

"Oh, don't worry about me, Mr. Wedderly," replied Miss Primm. "If I were as easy to please as your wife I would have been married long ago."—

CHAMBERLAIN'S COUGH REMEDY BENE-FITS A CITY COUNCILMAN AT KINGSTON, JAMAICA.

Mr. W. O'Reilly Fogarty, who is a member of the City Council at Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies, writes as follows: "One bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy had good effect on a cough that was giving me trouble and I think I should have been more quickly relieved if I had continued the remedy. That it was beneficial and quick in relieving me there is no doubt and it is my intention to obtain another bottle." For sale by Brewer Drug Co.

She—Oh, look at that scarecrow out there in the field!

He—That isn't a scarecrow.

She—It must be. See how motionless it is.

He—That's a man working by the day.

BAD STOMACH TROUBLE CURED.

Having been sick for the past two years with a bad stomach trouble, a friend gave me a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They did me so much good that I bought a bottle of them and have used twelve bottles in all. Today I am well of a bad stomach trouble.—Mrs. John Lowe, Cooper, Maine. These tablets are for sale by Brewer Drug Co.

Some Other Fellow's.

"With $100,000," said the man of expansive ideas, "I could make a fortune in Wall street."

"Yes," replied the plier, "but whose fortune would you make?"—Washington Star.

A CURE FOR MISERY.

"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M.
James, of Louellen, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time; and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at Brewer's drug store.

How It Affected Him.

Mrs. Myles—When are you coming to call on us?

Mrs. Styles—Oh, I really don't know!
"But you said you'd come soon and bring your husband?"

"I know I did, and I asked him last night to come over, and he said he'd lik eto dream over it, and, do you know, dear, he had an awful nightmare last night!"—Yonkers Statesman.

It is for want of application rather than means that men fail of success.—

Sour Stomach

No appetite, loss of strength, nervousness, headache, constipation, bad breath, general debility, sour risings, and catarrh of the stomach are all due to indigestion.
Kodol relieves indigestion. This new discovery represents the natural juices of digestion as they exist in a healthy stomach, combined with the greatest known tonic and reconstructive properties. Kodol for dyspepsia does not only relieve indigestion and dyspepsia, but this famous remedy helps all stomach troubles by cleansing, purifying, sweetening and strengthening the mucous membranes lining the stomach.

Mr. S. S. Ball, of Ravenswood, W. Va., says:—
"I was troubled with sour stomach for twenty years.
Kodol cured me and we are now using it in milk for baby."

Kodol Digests What You Eat.
