Swift Vengeance.

(Original.)

Traveling in New Mexico, I stopped one evening in a hamlet. A number of desperadoes had ridden into the town and were in possession of the saloon, from which came a chorus of yells.

I was sitting on the veranda of the tavern when I saw a young Mexican man and woman go by. The man was good looking, and the girl was a beauty. Though I could not understand the Spanish lingo they talked, it was plain they were lovers. They separated almost in front of the tavern, not scrupling to embrace at parting nor caring that any one saw them in each other's arms, apparently oblivious to all except themselves.

Ten minutes later the young man was passing the saloon when several of the brawlers came out bearing drunk, brandishing revolvers.

"You say you can beat me shootin'?" yelled one to another. "I'll show you what I can do." And, aiming at the young Mexican, he fired. The boy sank down on the ground with a moan. I heard a shriek and, looking toward a house the girl had entered, saw her staggering toward her lover. But she made only a few steps when she sank down in a swoon. Her mother came out and carried her back to the house. Several people put their heads out of their doors and windows and, seeing the young man lying on the ground, gathered round him and carried him into the nearest dwelling, where he died in a few minutes.

It was the shock of my life. I burned to see swift retribution meted out to the murderer, but there were only a few peaceable Mexicans in the town, and I knew it was impossible. I would gladly have left the place at once, but there was no conveyance except my horse, and I did not care to risk a journey at night alone.

I sat during the evening on the tavern veranda, endeavoring to quiet my indignation with tobacco. There was a half moon in the sky. The air was balmy, and perfect quiet reigned. The people of the town were all indoors. The desperadoes had drunk so hard that they were all doubtless in a stupor. At any rate, they made no noise, and they were still in the saloon. I knew I would not sleep if I went to bed, so continued to sit where I was, lighting one cigar from another. At midnight I was still there. The moon was blood red, just above the horizon and gave no light. There was a flaring lamp on a post in front of the saloon, which partly illumined the street.

It was near morning when the men came out of the saloon, a few at a time, and staggered past the tavern to a stable below, where they had put their horses. Presently one went by alone, whom, though the light was dim, I recognized as the murderer. He had scarcely passed the tavern when I saw a figure—I could not tell if it was man or woman—emerge from behind a house opposite and scud along behind him, keeping so far as possible in shadow.

Curiosity got the better of me, and I followed the man and his shadow. The former—I did not see the latter—was drawing near the stable, when I heard a soft voice call:

"Signor!"
The man paused and turned. What light there was shone directly on his face. I can see that face now, brutal, bloated, with a background of long tousled hair and a beard falling below his broad brimmed felt hat. He wore a shabby coat over a dark blue woolen shirt. His trousers were tucked in his boots.

Then I caught a glimpse of another figure whom I deemed to be the shadow. The back was toward me, and by the silhouette I knew that it was a woman. I could hear her talking to the man, part in Spanish, part in English, but was not near enough to hear what she said.

Two more men came out of the saloon, and the man and the woman I watched moved into shadow. The men went on past the place where the couple had been standing and entered the stable. By this time the gang began to lead their horses out and were making preparations to mount, some tightening their saddle girths, some looking to articles strapped to their saddles, while others went back to the saloon for a last drink. Half an hour went by before they were all mounted and ready to depart. Then I heard one of them ask:

"All here?"
A few minutes later a voice said, "Sam is missing."
"Oh, I saw him go off with a gal," said a voice.

"Well, I reckon he'll come when he gets ready."
Then they all rode away.

I waited till the clatter of their horses' hoofs had died away in the distance, then strolled along, taking care to keep in shadow, toward the place where the murderer and the woman had disappeared. I listened, but could hear nothing. I waited, still listening and peering into the darkness. All was still. I entered a lane through which I thought the couple had probably gone. There was nothing but the stars to light the way, and, passing a dark point, I stumbled against something lying on the ground. I turned and, looking down at my stumbling block, saw that it was the shape of a human body. I put my hand down on a man's breast and against something wet. I started to get away, but a desire to fix my suspicion conquered my dread. I struck a match, and it flashed in the ashen face of the murderer.

An hour later I left the place without a word of my find.

Feed For Late Summer Pigs.

In answer to the question "What is the best ration for late summer pigs (July and August) through the winter when intending to have them ready for the market about the 1st of April or May?" William Dietrich of Illinois says in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago: "The best ration for late summer pigs as well as pigs of any other season is that which furnishes the proper amount of protein, carbohydrates and bulk. A pig has only one stomach, and this a comparatively small one, therefore it is not adapted to roughages and must be fed largely on concentrated feeds. However, if a pig under five or six months of age is given a full ration of concentrated feeds it will invariably eat too much. Therefore the ration for pigs of this age should either be limited or else should contain a sufficient quantity of a roughage like clover, alfalfa or wheat bran, so that the digestible nutrients will be limited to the proper amount. Carbohydrates may be obtained from corn. Protein may be obtained from such feeds as skim milk, soy beans, cowpeas, clover, alfalfa, and if one chooses to patronize commercial feed dealers he may use tankage, oilmeal, wheat middlings and to a slight extent wheat bran."

Sorry He Spoke.

"Really, Miss Primm, you ought to get married," remarked Wedderly. "You'll soon be in the spinster class if you don't hurry up and catch on."

"Oh, don't worry about me, Mr. Wedderly," replied Miss Primm. "If I were as easy to please as your wife I would have been married long ago."—London Telegraph.

CHAMBERLAIN'S COUGH REMEDY BENEFITS A CITY COUNCILMAN AT KINGSTON, JAMAICA.

Mr. W. O'Reilly Fogarty, who is a member of the City Council at Kingston, Jamaica, West Indies, writes as follows: "One bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy had good effect on a cough that was giving me trouble and I think I should have been more quickly relieved if I had continued the remedy. That it was beneficial and quick in relieving me there is no doubt and it is my intention to obtain another bottle." For sale by Brewer Drug Co.

She—Oh, look at that scarecrow out there in the field!

He—That isn't a scarecrow.

She—It must be. See how motionless it is.

He—That's a man working by the day.

BAD STOMACH TROUBLE CURED.

Having been sick for the past two years with a bad stomach trouble, a friend gave me a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They did me so much good that I bought a bottle of them and have used twelve bottles in all. Today I am well of a bad stomach trouble—Mrs. John Lowe, Cooper, Maine. These tablets are for sale by Brewer Drug Co.

Some Other Fellow's.

"With $100,000," said the man of expansive ideas, "I could make a fortune in Wall street."

"Yes," replied the piker, "but whose fortune would you make?"—Washington Star.

A CURE FOR MISERY.

"I have found a cure for the misery malaria poison produces," says R. M. James, of Louellen, S. C. "It's called Electric Bitters, and comes in 50 cent bottles. It breaks up a case of chills or a bilious attack in almost no time; and it puts yellow jaundice clean out of commission." This great tonic medicine and blood purifier gives quick relief in all stomach, liver and kidney complaints and the misery of lame back. Sold under guarantee at Brewer's drug store.

How It Affected Him.

Mrs. Myles—When are you coming to call on us?

Mrs. Styles—Oh, I really don't know! "But you said you'd come soon and bring your husband?"

"I know I did, and I asked him last night to come over, and he said he'd like to dream over it, and, do you know, dear, he had an awful nightmare last night!"—Yonkers Statesman.

It is for want of application rather than means that men fall of success.—La Rochefoucauld.

Sour Stomach

No appetite, loss of strength, nervousness, headache, constipation, bad breath, general debility, sour risings, and catarrh of the stomach are all due to indigestion. Kodol relieves indigestion. This new discovery represents the natural juices of digestion as they exist in a healthy stomach, combined with the greatest known tonic and reconstructive properties. Kodol for dyspepsia does not only relieve indigestion and dyspepsia, but this famous remedy helps all stomach troubles by cleansing, purifying, sweetening and strengthening the mucous membranes lining the stomach.

Mr. S. S. Ball, of Ravenswood, W. Va., says: "I was troubled with sour stomach for twenty years. Kodol cured me and we are now using it in milk for baby."

Kodol Digests What You Eat.

Bottles only. Relieves indigestion, sour stomach, belching of gas, etc.
