

The Firm of Girdlestone

BY A. CONAN DOYLE

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

"Very well," the merchant said coldly. "If you insist on it, it must be done. But, of course, it would make a great difference in your salary."

"Eh?"
"You are at present getting fifteen pounds a month, and five per cent commission. These are exceptional terms in consideration of any risk that you may run. We shall dry dock the Black Eagle, and your salary is now ten pounds a month and two and a half commission."

"Belay, there, belay!" the sailor shouted. His coppery face was a shade darker than usual, and his bilious eyes had a venomous gleam in them. "Don't you beat me down!" he hissed, advancing to the table and leaning his hands upon it while he pushed his angry face forward until it was within a foot of that of the merchant. "Don't you try that game on me, for I am a freeborn British seaman, and I am under the thumb of no man. You'd reduce my salary, would ye?" roared Captain Hamilton Miggs, working himself into a fury. "Me that has worked for ye, and slaved for ye, and risked my life for ye. You try it on, guv'nor, just you try it on! Suppose I let out that little story of the painting out of the marks—where would the firm of Girdlestone be then? I guess you'd rather double my wage than have that 'arn goin' about."

"What do you mean?"
"What do I mean? You don't know what I mean, do you? Of course not. It wasn't you as set us on to go at night and paint out the government Plimsoll marks and paint 'em in again higher up, so as to be able to overload. That wasn't you, was it?"

"Do you mean to assert that it was?"
"In course I do," thundered the angry seaman.

The senior partner struck the gong which stood upon the table. "Gillray," he said quietly, "go out and bring in a policeman."

Captain Hamilton Miggs seemed to be somewhat startled by this sudden move of his antagonist. "Steady your helm, governor," he said. "What are ye up to now?"

"I'm going to give you in charge."
"What for?"
"For intimidating and using threatening language, and endeavoring to extort money under false pretenses."

"There's no witnesses," the sailor said in a half-cringing, half-defiant manner.

"Oh, yes, there are," Ezra Girdlestone remarked, coming into the room. He had been standing between the two doors which led to the counting house, and had overheard the latter portion of the conversation. "Don't let me interrupt you. You were saying that you would blacken my father's character unless he increased your salary."

"I didn't mean no harm," said Captain Hamilton Miggs, glancing nervously from the one to the other. He had been fairly well known to the law in his younger days, and had no desire to renew the acquaintance.

"Who painted out those Plimsoll marks?" asked the merchant.

"It was me."

"Did any one suggest it to you?"

"No."

"Shall I send in the policeman, sir?" asked Gillray, opening the door.

"Ask him to wait for a moment," Girdlestone answered. "And now, captain, to return to the original point, shall we dry dock the Black Eagle and reduce the salary, or do you see your way to going back in her on the same terms?"

"I'll go back," said the captain recklessly. "When d'ye want me to start?"

"When she's unloaded and loaded up again. Three weeks or a month yet. I expect that Spender will have come in with the Maid of Athens by that time."

"Unless some accident happens on the way," said Captain Hamilton Miggs, with a leer. "He was at Sierra Leone when we came up the coast. I say," he continued, giving his employer a confidential nudge with his elbow, "suppose we'd gone down in the bay this last time, you'd ha' been a bit out in your reckoning—eh, what?"

"Why so?"

"Well, we were over-insured on our outward passage. An accident then might ha' put thousands in your pocket I know. Coming back, though, the cargo was worth more than the insurance. I reckon you'd ha' been out of pocket if we'd foundered."

"We take our chance of those things," the merchant said with dignity.

"Well, good morning, guv'nor," Captain Hamilton Miggs said brusquely.

As he passed out through the office, Ezra rejoined his father.

"He's a rum chap," he remarked, jerking his head in the direction which Miggs had taken. "A useful servant, though."

"The fellow's half a savage himself," his father said. "He's in his element among them. That's why he gets on so well with them."

"He doesn't seem much the worse for the climate, either."

"His body does not, but his ideas are shockingly immoral! However, to return to business. I wish you to see the underwriters and pay the premium of the Black Eagle. If you see your way to it, increase the policy, but do it carefully, Ezra, and with tact. She will start about the time of the equinoctial gales. If anything should happen to her, it would be as well that the firm should have a margin on the right side."

CHAPTER III.

The residence of Major Tobias Clutterbuck was not known to any of his friends. It is true that at times he alighted in a modest way to his "little place," and even went the length of remarking airily to new acquaintances that he hoped they would look him up any time they happened to be in his direction. As he carefully refrained, however, from ever giving the slightest indication of which direction that might be, his invitations never led to any practical results. Still, they had the effect of filling the recipient with a vague sense of proffered hospitality, and occasionally led to more substantial kindness in return.

The gallant major's figure was a familiar one in the card room of the "Rag and Bobtail," or at the bow window of the Jeunesse Doree. Tall and pompous, with a portly frame and a puffy clean-shaven face which peered over an abnormally high collar and old-fashioned linen cravat, he stood as a very type and emblem of staid middle-aged respectability. The major's hat was always of the glossiest, the major's coat was without a wrinkle, and, in short, from the summit of the major's bald head to his bulbous fingertips and his gouty toes, there was not a flaw which the most severe critic of deportment could have detected. Let us add that the conversation of the major was as irreproachable as his person—that he was a distinguished soldier and an accomplished traveler, with a retentive memory and a mind stuffed with the good things of a lifetime. Combine all these qualities, and one would naturally regard the major as a most desirable acquaintance.

Standing at the head of the broad stone steps which lead up to the palatial edifice which its occupants irreverently term the "Rag and Bobtail," he was explaining to a bull-necked, olive-complexioned young man, the series of marriages and inter-marriages which had culminated in the production of his own portly stiff-backed figure. His companion, who was none other than Ezra Girdlestone of the great African firm of that name, leaned against one of the pillars of the portico and listened gloomily to the major's family reminiscences, giving an occasional yawn which he made no attempt to conceal.

"It's as plain as the fingers of my hand," the old soldier said in a wheezy muffled brogue as if he were speaking from under a feather bed. "See here now, Girdlestone—this is Miss Leticia Snackles, of Snackleton, a cousin of old Sir Joseph." The major tapped his thumb with the silver head of his walking stick to represent the maiden Snackles. "She marries Crawford, of the Blues—one of the Warwickshire Crawfords; that's him"—here he elevated his stubby forefinger—"and here's their three children, Jimmie, Harold and John." Up went three other fingers. "Jimmie Crawford grows up, and then Charley Clutterbuck runs away with her. This other thumb o' mine will stand for that young devil Charley, and then my fingers—"

"Oh, hang your fingers," Girdlestone exclaimed with emphasis. "It's very interesting, major, but it would be more intelligible if you wrote it out."

"And so I shall, me boy!" the major cried enthusiastically, by no means abashed at the sudden interruption. "I'll draw it up on a bit of foolscap paper. Let's see, Fenchurch street, eh? Address to the offices, of course. Though for that matter, 'Girdlestone, London,' would find you. I was spakin' of ye to Sir Musgrave Moore, of the Rifles the other day, and he knew you at once. 'Girdlestone?' says he. 'The same,' says I. 'A merchant prince?' says he. 'The same,' says I. 'I'd be proud to meet him,' says he. 'And you shall,' says I. He's the best blood of county Waterford."

"More blood than money, I suppose," the young man said. "I'm due in the city. The governor leaves at four. Good-by; shall I see you to-night?"

"Card room, as per usual," quoth the clean-shaven warrior. He looked after the retreating figure of his late companion with anything but a pleasant expression upon his face. The young man happened to glance round as he was half way down the street, on which the major smiled after him paternally, and gave a merry flourish with his stick.

At last he hailed a passing bus, into which he sprang. After a drive which brought him to the other side of the city, he got out in a broad, busy thoroughfare, lined with large shops. Down a somber avenue the major strutted with all his wonted pomposity, until about half way down he reached a tall brick-looking house, with many notices of "apartments" glaring from the windows. The major walked briskly up the stone steps, and pushing open the great splotchy door, which bore upon it a brass plate indicating that the establishment was kept by a Mrs. Robins, he walked into the hall with the air of one who treats familiar ground. Up one flight of stairs, up two flights of stairs, and up three flights of stairs did he climb, until on the fourth landing he pushed open a door and found himself in a small room, which formed for the nonce the "little place" about which he was wont at the club to make depreciatory allusions, so skillfully introduced that the listener was left in doubt as to whether the major was the happy possessor of a country house and grounds, or whether he merely owned a large suburban villa. Even this modest sanctum was not entirely the major's own, as was shown by the presence of a ruddy-faced man with a long, tawny beard, who sat on one side of the empty fireplace. As the other entered, the man in the chair gave vent to agitated grunt, and Major Clutterbuck returned the greeting with an off-handed nod. His next proceeding was to take off his glossy hat, and pack it away in a hat box. He then removed his coat, his collar, his tie and his gaiters with equal solicitude, and put them in a place of safety. After which he donned a long purple dressing gown and a smoking cap, in which garb he performed the first steps of a masurka as a sign of the additional ease which he experienced.

"Not much to dance about either, me boy," the old soldier said, seating himself in a camp chair and putting his feet upon another one. "We're all on the verge. Unless luck takes a turn there's no saying what may become of us."

"We have been badder than this before now many a time," said the yellow bearded man, in an accent which proclaimed him to be a German. "My money will come, or something will arrive to set all things right."

Stigismond von Baumser was a political refugee from the Fatherland who had managed to become foreign clerk in a small London firm, an occupation which just enabled him to keep body and soul together. He and the major had lodged in different rooms in another establishment until some common leaven of Bohemianism had brought them together. When circumstances had driven them out of their former abode it had occurred to the major that by sharing his rooms with Von Baumser he would diminish his own expenses, and at the same time secure an agreeable companion, for the veteran was a sociable soul in his unofficial hours, and had all the Hibernian dislike to solitude. The arrangement commended itself to the German, for he had a profound admiration for the other's versatile talents and varied experiences, so he granted an acquiescence and the thing was done. When the major's luck was good there were brave times in the little fourth floor back. On the other hand, if any slice of good fortune came in the German's way, the major had a fair share of the prosperity. During the hard times which intervened between these gleams of opulence, the pair roughed it uncomplainingly as best they might.

"Have you had your letter?" the major asked. The German was expecting his quarterly remittance from his friends at home, and they were both anxiously awaiting it.

Von Baumser shook his head. "They should have sent a wake ago." "But you—how do you stand for money?"

Major Clutterbuck took ten sovereigns out of his trousers pocket and placed them upon the table. "You know me law," he said. "I never on any consideration break into these. You can't sit down to play cards for high stakes with less in your purse, and if I was to change one they'd all go like a whiff o' smoke. Bar this money I've hardly a penny."

"Nor me," said Von Baumser, despondently.

"I say, Baumser, I can't stand that young fellow Girdlestone. I'll have to chuck him up. He's a cold-blooded, flinty-hearted, calculating sort of a chap."

"What for did you make him your friend, then?"

"Well," the old soldier confessed, "it seemed to me that if he wanted to fool his money away at cards, Tobias Clutterbuck might as well have the handling of it as any one else. He plays a safe game for low stakes, and never throws away a chance. I think I've been a loser in pocket by knowing him, walle as to me character, I'm very sure I'm the worse there."

"Vat's the matter mit him?"

"What's not the matter with him? If he's agreeable he's not natural, and if he's natural he's not agreeable. I don't pretend to be a saint. I've seen some fun in my day, and hope to see some more before I die, but there are some things that I wouldn't do. If I live be cards it's all fair and above board. I never play anything but games o' skill, and I reckon on me skill bringing me out on the right side, taking one night with another through the year. Again, at billiards I may not always play me best, but that's generalship. You don't want a whole room to know to a point what your game is. I'm the last man to preach, but I don't like that chap, and I don't like that handsome brazen face of his. I've spent the greater part of my life reading folks' faces, and never very far out, either."

"Vat did you say his name was?" Von Baumser asked, suddenly.

"Girdlestone."

"Is his father a merchant? One who trades with the Afrikaner?"

"The same."

Von Baumser took a bulky pocketbook from his inside pocket and scanned a long list of names therein. "Ah, it is the same," he cried at last triumphantly, shutting up the book and replacing it. "Girdlestone & Co., African merchants—Fenchurch street, City."

"Those are they?"

"And you say they are rich?"

"Yes. Very rich."

"Very rich! Ho, ho! Very rich!" he laughed. "I know dem, not as friends, but I know dem and their affairs."

"What are you driving at? Let's have it. Out with it, man."

"I tell you," said the German, suddenly becoming supernaturally solemn and sawing his hand up and down in the air to emphasize his remarks, "in three or four months, or a year at the most, there will be no firm of Girdlestone. They are rotten, useless—whoo!" He blew an imaginary feather up into the air to demonstrate the extreme fragility of the house in question.

(To be continued.)

A Doubtful Advantage.

Customer—Tell me, truly, which of these two hats is more becoming?

Milliner—This one. See! It conceals your face more.—Brooklyn Life.

RHEUMATISM CAN NOT BE RUBBED AWAY

It is perfectly natural to rub the spot that hurts, and when the muscles, nerves, joints and bones are throbbing and twitching with the pains of Rheumatism the sufferer is apt to turn to the liniment bottle, or some other external application, in an effort to get relief from the disease, by producing counter-irritation on the flesh. Such treatment will quiet the pain temporarily, but can have no direct curative effect on the real disease because it does not reach the blood, where the cause is located. Rheumatism is more than skin deep—it is rooted and grounded in the blood and can only be reached by constitutional treatment—IT CANNOT BE RUBBED AWAY. Rheumatism is due to an excess of uric acid in the blood, brought about by the accumulation in the system of refuse matter which the natural avenues of bodily waste, the Bowels and Kidneys, have failed to carry off. This refuse matter, coming in contact with the different acids of the body, forms uric acid which is absorbed into the blood and distributed to all parts of the body, and Rheumatism gets possession of the system. The aches and pains are only symptoms, and though they may be scattered or relieved for a time by surface treatment, they will reappear at the first exposure to cold or lamppness, or after an attack of indigestion or other irregularity. Rheumatism can never be permanently cured while the circulation remains saturated with irritating, pain-producing uric acid poison. The disease will shift from muscle to muscle or joint to joint, settling on the nerves, causing inflammation and swelling and such terrible pains that the nervous system is often shattered, the health undermined, and perhaps the patient becomes deformed and crippled for life. S. S. S. thoroughly cleanses the blood and renovates the circulation by neutralizing the acids and expelling all foreign matter from the system. It warms and invigorates the blood so that instead of a weak, sour stream, constantly depositing acid and corrosive matter in the muscles, nerves, joints and bones, the body is fed and nourished by rich, health-sustaining blood which completely and permanently cures Rheumatism. S. S. S. is composed of both purifying and tonic properties—just what is needed in every case of Rheumatism. It contains no potash, alkali or other mineral ingredient, but is made entirely of purifying, healing extracts and juices of roots, herbs and barks. If you are suffering from Rheumatism do not waste valuable time trying to rub a blood disease away, but begin the use of S. S. S. and write us about your case and our physicians will give you any information or advice desired free of charge and will send our special treatise on Rheumatism.

S.S.S.

PURELY VEGETABLE

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Different.
A woman's "slim and willowy"
When she is sweet sixteen;
But when she is at middle age
They call her "long and lean."
—Houston Post.

You Can Get Allen's Foot-Ease FREE.
Write Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y., for a free sample of Allen's Foot-Ease. It cures sweating, hot swollen, aching feet. It makes new or tight shoes easy. A certain cure for corns, ingrowing nails and bunions. All druggists sell it. 25c. Don't accept any substitute.

On Edge.
The stranger was looking at the network of railway tracks that monopolized the lake front.
"They call this the Illinois Central, do they?" he asked.
"Yes," said the old resident.
"H'mph! It looks more like the Illinois Marginal."—Chicago Tribune.

All the More Deserving.
Woman of the House—A big, strong man like you going around begging! You ought to be ashamed of yourself!
Tuffold Knutt (touching his eyes with a grimy handkerchief)—I am, mum. It mortifies me 'most to death. Folks generally treats me well on that account, mum.

No Time for Details.
An American speeding over the continent of Europe in his automobile asked his chauffeur, "Where are we?"
"In Paris," shouted the man at the wheel, and the dust flew.

"Oh, never mind the details," irritably screamed the American, millionaire, "I mean what continent?"

Had None.
"Going to write a book, eh?"
"Yep, thought I would."
"Going to tell about your early struggles?"
"Nope; never had no early struggles; didn't get married till I was past 40."
—Houston Post.

WHAT CAUSES HEADACHE
From October to May, colds are the most frequent cause of headache. LAXATIVE BROMO QUIL NINE removes cause. E. W. Grove on box. See—

Not a Circumstance.
Enthusiastic Auditor (at the opera)—Didn't she do that aria divinely!
Boarding House Miss—Huh! You ought to hear that on our graphophone!

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists. 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

It is predicted by a very modern architect that the house of one large room, a small kitchen attached and an enormous enclosed porch, with facilities for outdoor sleeping has come to stay.

Cheapness vs. Quality

In the matter of food you can't afford to sacrifice Quality for Cheapness. Economy is right and good but inferior food products are dear at any price.

KG BAKING POWDER

is economical—not Cheap. Try it. The best at any price or your money back.

JAQUES MFG. CO.
Chicago.

Guaranteed Pure and Wholesome

W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES

$3.00 SHOES AT ALL PRICES, FOR EVERY MEMBER OF THE FAMILY, MEN, BOYS, WOMEN, MISSES AND CHILDREN.

W. L. Douglas makes and sells more men's $3.00, $3.50 and $5.00 shoes than any other manufacturer in the world, because they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer, and are of greater value than any other shoes in the world to-day.

W. L. Douglas $4 and $5 Gilt Edge Shoes Cannot Be Equalled At Any Price

W. L. Douglas name and price is stamped on bottom. Take No Substitutes. Sold by the best shoe dealer everywhere. Shoes made by W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

Foot Color Fast and Guaranteed

(To be continued.)