Her Champion.

[Original.]

Miss Wedgewood, an American girl traveling abroad, found it necessary to journey from London to Paris attended only by her maid. On reaching Calais she was ushered into a compartment already occupied by two Englishmen who, from the dress and the airs they put on, might be London swells. Before the train started a third man entered, took a seat at the farther end of the compartment from Miss Wedgewood, opposite the swells, and, taking periodicals and newspapers from his pocket, began to read. He did not even glance at Miss Wedgewood, who appreciated his not doing so inasmuch as the swells stared at her continually. No sooner had the train started than they began to discuss her in indifferent Spanish. Miss Wedgewood spoke French, German, Spanish and Italian. This is what they said, translated into London English:

"She's vevy pwetty," said one. "If'm—awdina—she's Amewican. I saw 'Cleveland' on her trunk. That's somewhere in Amewica, I believe. They haven't the generations of refinement over there to make beauty." "Look at the way she does her hair." "And the hat. It's last season's make. I fawncy she's rich, but new to fashion."

Miss Wedgewood noted a lowering on the brow of the gentleman sitting opposite her critics, indicating that he not only understood Spanish, but that their criticisms annoyed him. He held a newspaper before him so that the men opposite could not see his face, though it was visible to Miss Wedgewood, occupying a different position. He glanced aside as though desiring to satisfy himself of the justice of their strictures, but Miss Wedgewood, fortunately, she considered it, was at the time just turning her eyes from his side of the coach to her own, assuming an imperturbable countenance, apparently unconscious of what was going on.

Suddenly the gentleman who was reading lowered his paper and addressed the critics in Spanish.

"Gentlemen, I am surprised that Englishmen, whom I judge by appearances to belong to the upper classes, should criticise a lady."

One of the men addressed apologized, stating that they had supposed no one in the compartment understood them. The other seemed inclined to resent the stranger's interference.

"I wish you to understand, sir," he said, "that a bit of private conversation between two gentlemen is not a matter for remark by a third person. You are very impudent to object, I would have you know, sir."

"Very well, sir," said the other, "proceed to make a cad of yourself, only don't go so far as to force me to take the lady under my protection." And he resumed his reading.

The man who had last spoken resumed his remarks about Miss Wedgewood, making them far broader and bolder than before. Miss Wedgewood's champion again laid down his paper and said:

"The presence of the lady renders an insult impracticable. Will you kindly consider yourself insulted." And, first glancing at Miss Wedgewood to see that she was not observant, he tossed his glove at the man; then, drawing a card from his pocket, handed it to him. Before looking at it the man handed him one of his own cards.

"Count Lichtenstein!" exclaimed the Englishman.

"And you, I perceive, are Lord Battered. I will be ready to receive any friend your lordship may send at the Grand hotel within two hours after our arrival in Paris."

"I know you by reputation—the reputation you made at your university with the small sword—but as the challenged party I prefer pistols. I will teach you Germans, whose counts are as plentiful as tram drivers in London, that you can't have your own way with a British nobleman."

"Any weapon you prefer, Lord Battered." And the count resumed his reading as though nothing of consequence had happened. Battered instructed his companion, Mr. Oldershaw, to act for him, and the count agreed to a meeting at a spot near Versailles at 6 o'clock on the morning after their arrival in Paris. Oldershaw was to visit the count's friend, Edward Wedgewood, an American, and with him arrange the minor details.

The most astonishing part of this singular affair, every word of which Miss Wedgewood understood, was that her defender's second was to be her own brother. When the preliminaries were all settled she turned to the parties in question.

"Gentlemen," she said in excellent Spanish, "there is no occasion for this quarrel. If I needed to be championed, my brother, Mr. Wedgewood, would be the person to see me righted. Count Lichtenstein, now I think of it, I have heard my brother speak of you as a fellow student at Gottingen and of your exploits in fencing and marksmanship. I cannot permit you to shoot at any one on my account. Gentlemen, please consider this affair setted off pain of being called to account by the Parisian authorities."

If a bomb had exploded in the carriage it could not have produced more surprise and consternation than this little speech. One of the Englishmen, abashed, leaned back in his corner. The other looked very red, withdrew his glass from before his eye, wiped it and took up a novel lying beside him. Count Lichtenstein took a seat beside his friend's sister, and they conversed gayly, ignoring the others till they reached the capital, when the two parties separated. MARY C. BECK.

This is what Hon. Jake Moore, State Warden of Georgia, says of Kodol for Dyspepsia: "E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago, Ill.—Dear Sirs—I have suffered more than twenty years from indigestion. About eighteen months ago I had grown so much worse that I could not digest a crust oorn bread and could not retain anything on my stomach. I lost 20 lbs; in fact I made up my mind that I could not live but a short time, when a friend of mine recommended Kodol. I consented to try it to please him and I was better in one day. I now weigh more than I ever did in my life and am in better health than for many years. Kodol did it. I keep a bottle constantly, and write this hoping that humanity will be benefited. Yours very truly, Jake C. Moore, Atlanta, Aug. 10, 1904."

Some people never grow old—at least they never reach the age of discretion.

DO NOT CROWD THE SEASON.

The first warm days of spring bring with them a desire to get out and enjoy the exhilarating air and sunshine. Children that have been housed up all winter are brought out and you wonder where they all came from. The heavy winter clothing is thrown aside and many shed their flannels. Then a cold wave comes and people say that grip is epidemic. Colds at this season are even more dangerous than in mid-winter, as there is much more danger of pneumonia. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, however, and you will have nothing to fear. It always cures, and we have never known a cold to result in pneumonia when it was used. It is pleasant and safe to take. Children like it. For sale by all druggists.

GOOD FOR EVERYBODY.

Mr. Norman R. Coulter, a prominent architect, in the Deibert Bldg., San Francisco, says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and build up the system." Electric Bitters is the best selling medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequalled. 50c at Brewer's drug store.

No Thanks.

"Didn't think it possible. How'd it happen?"

"Why, I said to a woman in the car, 'Madam, have my seat.'—Philadelphia Ledger.

CHAMBERLAIN'S COUGH REMEDY IS BOTH AGREEABLE AND EFFECTIVE.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has no superior for coughs, colds and croup and the fact that it is pleasant to take and contains nothing in any way injurious has made it a favorite with mothers. Mr. W. S. Pelham, a merchant of Kirksville, Iowa, says: "For more than twenty years Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been my leading remedy for all throat troubles. It is especially successful in cases of croup. Children like it and my customers who have used it will not take any other." For sale by all druggists.

Foiled.

"Ah!" said Bragley, with a view to making Miss Wise jealous. "I was alone last evening with some one I admire very much."

"Ah!" echoed the bright girl. "Alone, were you?"—Philadelphia Press.
