MEHAMA.

OCTOBER, 7.

It is a well known fact that the country postmaster is supposed to be a walking bureau of information, and must answer the hundreds of questions, put to him daily. And he is expected to do almost anything under the sun to accommodate his patrons, such as reading and writing their letters and even licking their postage stamps, and they all do these little acts of accommodation, but we believe our Postmaster is entitled to the blue ribbon. We understand he arises every morning at half past four o'clock to feed and carry the stage-driver's team.

Mr Bass and family of Southern Oregon, are visiting Mr Basses parents of this place.

C. A. Mulkey has returned home from Portland and is cutting wood for C. S. Bass, this week.

The Pennebaker Brothers, have gone to Gates, where they are building a large dwelling for one of the Merchants of that place.

The Linn county commissioners were in town Tuesday and expressed themselves as being well satisfied with the progress being made on the new bridge. Mr Royal who is superintending the work tells us the bridge will be open to the public in another week.

What might have been a serious blaze occurred last Saturday night in the Post-office. Mr Terrell closed the store about nine o'clock and everything seemed all O. K. Mr Irvine and wife returning at a later hour from Mill City opened the store door and found it full of smoke. A puff of water soon quenched the fire and it was found that the spit box was burned and a large hole in the floor.

J. A. Richards team ran away with him yesterday, broke his buggy up and Jim was pretty badly bruised but nothing serious we understand.

E. A. Taylor lost his driving mare the other day.

A. A. Richards went to the barn the other morning and found his colt dead.

"A STATESMAN WITH A CONSCIENCE."

Description of the Republican Presidential Candidate by Senator Borah of Idaho.
(From Senator Borah's Boston Speech.)

"Now, it seems to be conceded by friend and foe that few men have been nominated for the presidency whose experience, whose training and whose sound and wholesome fashion of grasping and dealing with public questions were equal to those of William H. Taft.

"He is not a crusader, he is a statesman with conscience. He has won his present position through a cheerful, unhesitating and undeviating devotion to duty, through actually achieving things on the open field of action, through an intelligent conception of the strength and worth of our great government with its checks and balances; and the strength and capacity of our citizenship with its loyalty and its patriotism.

"No man ever had a deeper regard for the fundamental principles and precepts upon which this government is founded, and no one ever had a firmer conviction that the constitution is a sufficient chart by which to measure all rights and obligations and to gauge all the demands and all the aspirations and restrain and control all the recklessness of this indomitable race of ours. Trained in the law, eleven years on the bench, he explored well the sources of jurisprudence and carried away from his work an everlasting devotion to order and justice.

"Under all circumstances and under all emergencies, he has proved himself a brave, clean-minded, self-poised and courageous statesman. No man can put his finger upon a little or cowardly act, an incompetent or questionable piece of public service—no stain upon his private life, no shadow upon his public career. And standing now in the full fierce light which beats upon a throne, with eager eyes scrutinizing every act of a long and arduous public career, no doubt arises as to his experience and ability, no challenge comes to his fine sense of duty or his patriotism.

I believe our strong party with its great principles is only in its infancy. Our glory as a nation has but just begun. There are mighty problems yet to be solved, grave questions to be answered, complex issues to be wrought out, but I believe we can trust the Grand Old Party and its leaders to care for the entire future of our Nation and of our people as it has cared for them so well in the past.—Hon. James S. Sherman.
