

LOCAL PLUMBER BUSY MAKING PRUNE DRYERS

Our hustling plumber and mechanic, Jacob Spaniol, has on the high speed these days, being engaged in the construction of prune dryers for orchardists in this vicinity. Last week he built a dryer for Mr. Redline, who resides near Shaw, and this week he is putting up a larger one for Chas. McAllister, also of the Shaw neighborhood. The dryers are of sufficient size to handle an immense amount of prunes, and their construction is a very complicated task. That this sort of work should be brought here indicates the farmers' confidence in the Stayton plumber.

OPENING OF WOOLEN MILL CERTAIN, HE SAYS

Portland.

The finished product turned out by the local mill will command a market throughout the United States, and also in the Orient. The Santiam Woolen mill will be a manufacturer of high grade blankets, mackinaws, batting and mattresses, and will be the largest exclusive maker of wool blankets on the Pacific Coast.

We believe that the advantage which will accrue to Stayton through the operation of the mill is too obvious to need comment. It is interesting, however, to know that Mr. Wilbur purposes benefitting the town in every way possible in the conduct of his enterprise. In an interview this week he said:

"I want the co-operation and friendship of all local people. I want everyone to realize what this industry will mean to the town. Once I have placed the mill in operation it will never stop. When run at full capacity the mill will turn out goods to the value of $150,000 a year—goods that will be shipped out and paid for with outside money that will be distributed here. I think the benefits of the enterprise speak for themselves."

LADY-BUGS AND HOPS

Hopgrowers are deploring the absence of lady bugs this year in exterminating aphids from the vines, says the Albany Herald. Spraying has doubtless killed many of these helpful little workers, but their almost total absence is to some extent due to the countless number of new birds that have appeared this year, for although the small birds eat aphids they also eat lady bugs.
