SHOW MONDAY NIGHT

The Lee Willard company of traveling players put on a fairly acceptable performance of "The Battle of Life" at the Opera House Monday night. The plot of the play was the same old story, but was redeemed by some rather clever lines at not too frequent intervals. With the exception of Mr. Willard, who was naturally the best of the players, the cast was mediocre, the villain and one or two others being so stiff that you expected to hear their joints creak when they moved. The show was witnessed by a good sized audience.

Incidentally, Mr. Willard appeared between the third and fourth acts (not a curtain call) and in a rather unnecessary talk, handed the town of Stayton a nice dish of lemons. We might say that their "Metropolitan singing and dancing" was "simply out of sight."
