BUYERS' WEEK IN PORTLAND

At a recent meeting of the jobbers and manufacturers of Portland it was decided to make Buyers' Week an annual event, the next one to be held from August 19 to 15, 1914. An official report was made of the results of the buyers' week during September which showed that buyers from 263 stores in 150 towns visited Portland. Of this number 108 bought more than $500 worth of goods, entitling them to a refund of their railroad fare. While the most of the buyers came from Oregon communities, Washington, Idaho and Montana were liberally represented and every visitor went home at peace with himself and his entertainers and satisfied that his time and money had been well spent.

BATHING WITH INDIANS.

An Experience That Tried the Nerve of a White Visitor.

The Indians of the Pacific coast evidently enjoy their "sweat baths." A correspondent who once took one of these baths with a party of his Indian friends thus describes the ceremony:

The season was early spring, and ice still floated in the river. The Indians built an oval hut on the shore, thrusting pilant willows into the ground to form a framework, over which they spread grass matting covered with earth. They lighted a fire before this hut and heated several large round stones. When everything was in readiness an ancient savage came up to the house and invited me to join in the festivities.

I took a warm blanket and accompanied my guide to the "sweat house." The Indians were standing about the fire unclothed, except that each one was wrapped in a blanket. I was told to take off my clothes, which I did. Then I wrapped my drapery about me and stood with them by the fire. One of the Indians began a chant, and we all started for the sweat house. I brought up the rear.

The first Indian threw aside his blanket, stooped, entered and curled himself up in a corner. One by one we crept in until we were packed in like sardines in a can. An attendant passed in a bucket of water, rolled in one of the heated stones and fastened several heavy blankets over the opening of the tent. It was dark—and hot.

The Indian nearest the opening threw some water on the hot stone, and immediately the hut was filled with steam. I never endured such torture in my life. The Indians kept up the chant, and we lay there and suffocated. When I at least had reached the limit of endurance the leader threw back the blankets and made a dash for the river, followed by his companions. I saw that I was expected to follow their lead, and I did so with fear and trembling.

Into the water they plunged, and in plunged I. Cold? It was certainly not very much above the freezing point. We splashed round in the water for several minutes, emerged and wrapped ourselves in blankets. The Indians stood about the fire for several minutes and then re-entered the sweat house. As for me, I had had plenty. Clad in my blanket, with my garments trailing over my arm, I scurried homeward.

"Down Brakes."

In newspaper accounts of railway collisions one frequently encounters this statement:

"On seeing the danger the engineer whistled 'down brakes' and reversed the lever."

As a matter of fact, the expression "down brakes" has been obsolete for a long time. What the engineer really does when a collision seems impending is to shut off steam, apply the air brake and open the sand valves. All this takes about five seconds, and in that time all that human effort is able to accomplish for the train and passenger cars may be done. Railway engineers are instructed never to reverse the engine after the air brake has been applied, because the reversal reduces the resisting power of the brakes.—Harper's Weekly.

The Wonderful Bee.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the eminent Belgian student and author, writing on comb honey, says that it is an article "to which we can add nothing, from which we can take nothing, an article that unites in equal perfection the science of the chemist, the geometriean, the architect and the engineer. Its masterpiece, the hexagonal cell, touches absolute perfection, a perfection that all the geniuses in the world, were they to meet in conclave, could in no way enhance. No living creature, not even man, has achieved in the center of his sphere what the bee has achieved in her own, and were some one from another world to descend and ask of the earth the most perfect creation we need but offer the humble comb of honey."

Rold of Yountsville, Cal., in which Rold says a company called the Farm and Home company of San Francisco, is representing to him that it will locate him on a 320-acre homestead in southern Oregon for a fee of $320.

Senator Chamberlain presented Miss Fern Hobbs, secretary to Governor West, to Assistant Secretary of the Interior Jones and to Land Commissioner Talman, in order that she might bring up questions of the Oregon indemnity school land selections on which patents have not yet been issued.

Miss Hobbs and Secretary Chamberlain had a conference with Representative Hawley regarding the Chamberlain bill, providing for an exchange of school lands in forest reserves and the creation of a state forest reserve.

COUNTY CLERK WRITES LETTER

Salem Oregon, October 29, 1913.
 Judges & Clerks of Election Board,
 Stayton, Oregon.
 Gentlemen:—

There seems to be some question by somebody there at Stayton as to who is entitled to vote on the Local Option Question on November 4th. Every legal voter residing in the present boundaries of Stayton is entitled to vote on this question beyond any question of a doubt.

In a Supreme Court decision it is held that, the matter of giving the description where an entire City or County is concerned is superfluous and immaterial and any discrepancy that might exist in the description cannot effect anyone's right to vote who actually live within the corporate limits of the town of Stayton as they now exist.

Respectfully,
 Max Gehlar
