CHARMED BY MUSIC, SNAKE FREES VICTIM

Wrapped Around Man, It Loosens Coils as Girl Plays.

Puñxsutawney, Pa.—With the coils of a python twenty-five feet long tightening gradually around his body, James Harve Stenger, manager for a carnival company, escaped being crushed to death only through the power of music to soothe the reptile after the efforts of six men had failed to dislodge it.

Mr. Stenger was superintending the unloading of a box of snakes when the python escaped. For an instant the reptile seemed to be dazed, and as Mr. Stenger took a stick and tried to push it through a door into a big glass case the snake turned like a flash. In an instant the python entwined itself around Mr. Stenger, pinning his arms to his side.

Six men went to Mr. Stenger's aid and attempted to pull the snake from his body. The folds of the big reptile, however, only drew closer, and Mr. Stenger was on the verge of a collapse when Mile. La Boneto, who owns the reptile, appeared with a flageolet between her lips.

Stationing herself near the snake, she began to play a low, weird melody, at the same time swaying her body to and fro gently. Raising its head, the python began to sway in rhythm with the player and the music, and, gradually loosening its folds from Mr. Stenger, it coiled on the ground with its head swinging from side to side.

Slowly approaching the snake, Mile. La Boneto, still playing gently, forced it into the glass cage. In the meantime Mr. Stenger, who had toppled over unconscious when released from the folds of the snake, was revived and found to be uninjured.

Tries to Swim River Carrying Forty Pounds of Them.

Newton, N. J.—Harry C. Pitman, eighteen years old, was drowned in trying to swim the Paulinskill river with a catch of forty pounds of all kinds of fish strung about his neck. He went down in the whirlpool near the Stillwater bridge, while friends who thought his cries for help were in fun laughed at him. They answered his second frantic cry, but too late.

Pitman went spearing fish with Edward Huff of Hardwick township, by whom he was employed, and Lester Huff, brother of Edward. They had good luck, and at 2:30 o'clock decided they had enough to "call it a night." Pitman suggested that they swim back and started first.
