Our ubiquitous citizen, Slim Peters, got slightly macerated in his cider mill one day last week. If Slim had had a little more fat on his bones there wouldn't have been much left.

Fat Griggs got a lady bug in his ear while sleeping out of doors last week. Fat says it felt as if the whole bug family had crawled in. Spud Witters suggested that Fat pour in some castor oil, which he did, and Mrs. Bug got nauseated and came out for fresh air. Fat now thinks the only way to "take oil" is in the ear.

Bill Skink's twins, Max and Climax, got mixed in the bath tub the other day, and if Mrs. Skink, who was Miss Lucretia Leftover, had not had the good fortune to give Max a good spanking before the bath, she would never have known which was which.

The Wizard. "It's a remarkable thing," said old Brightboy at tea time, "but I can push my saucer through the handle of my cup." The others glanced at the small handle and gave the speaker a withering look. "I can," persisted Brightboy. "Do it, then," they challenged. Calmly taking up his spoon, Brightboy passed it through the handle of the cup and then pushed the saucer with it.

The Dardanelles. The present name of Dardanelles was given to the ancient Hellespont from the two castles that protect the narrowest part of the strait and that themselves preserve the name of the famous city of Dardanus in the ancient Troad. The name of "Dardanelles" is briefly referred to as having been derived from the name of the city of Dardanus, but the Encyclopedia Britannica states that it is the twin castles for which the strait is actually named.—New York Times.

Cousins and Economy. "Should cousins marry?" was the subject of an animated discussion at a ladies' debating club the other night. After a great many speakers had vigorously taken the negative side a prepossessing young lady, who was known to have crowds of cousins herself, spoke up boldly in the affirmative and threw fresh life into the discussion by declaring that she always did her best to encourage her own cousins to marry one another, as such unions were very economical. "Economical! How, dear?" her clubmates cried in chorus. "Well, you see," said the speaker demurely, "one wedding present does for both them."—Exchange.

To Address the President. The address of the president is simply "The President of the United States." In the First congress there was debate over a title, and it was proposed by several members that he be addressed as "His Excellency" and by others as "His Highness," but a committee reported that it is not proper to annex any style or letter other than that given in the constitution. In the constitutional convention the first report fixed the term of office at seven years without eligibility to reelection. In debate various periods from "good behavior" to twenty years were favored. The limit of four years was finally adopted in grand committee and ratified by the constitution.

Channing on America. Earnestly do I desire for this country that, instead of copying Europe with an undiscerning civility, it may have a character of its own, corresponding to the freedom and equality of our institutions.—W. E. Channing.
