Fine Pathe Feature "The Test"

Jane Grey, the star, is a fortunate choice. Her emotional qualities are extraordinary, and her classic beauty screens more than ordinarily well. She has been starred in many motion pictures and plays, but she has never done finer acting than in "The Test," a powerful story of American life with a great big throbbing theme.

There is no chance of misunderstanding its message. It starts with a rush and continues through five reels, gathering momentum as it goes.

Suppose a sweet little woman—someone near and dear to you—should be forced to sacrifice herself to save her worthless husband from the prosecution he deserves. Suppose the rich man should laugh at the promise he made to get her, and send the other to prison. Suppose she should be offered one position, then another, only to find what they really mean. That is what wonderful Jane Grey does in "The Test."

She resolves to commit suicide. A novelist prevents her from carrying out her desire. "I've some stenographer's work you can do," he says. She has heard that before—in just those words. Then—why should she go on fighting? Why shouldn't she take what she can get—and get all she can for as little as she can give? "All right," she says, "I'll go."

He takes her to his apartment. There is a pause. Her voice breaks; "Go on; bring out the drinks."

But he is the man she thought didn't exist. You hope she will meet the test and conquer. How will the story end?

The supporting cast is one such as is seldom seen on the screen. It includes Lumsden Hare, the English actor, Claude Fleming, Carl Harbaugh and Inez Buck, remembered for her work in the title role of "The Misleading Lady," the stage success. Many of the scenes are laid upon a millionaire's estate in Long Island. The locations are a delight to the eye.

Pathe is one of the pioneers of the motion picture business, and its Gold Reoster Plays are of the highest standard. "The Test" is one of the best of them. This remarkable picture will be shown at the Star theatre Sunday, May the sixth.

Necessities of War.
When Lloyd George in England undertook to organize the ministry of munitions a glazier began to stamp out cartridge clips; a manufacturer of music rolls used his equipment to make gauges; a concern engaged before the war in preparing infants' food began delivering plugs for shells; an advertising agency manufactured shell adapters; watchmakers began adjusting fuses; a manufacturer of baking machinery became a contractor for six inch high explosive shells; a jewelry house devoted itself exclusively to periscopes; a phonograph concern sent millions of delicate shell parts to the assembling stations; a firm which made nothing but sheep shearing machinery started turning out shell cases; a cream separator factory manufactured shell primers. Among other producers of finished shells were candle-makers, flour mills, tobacco manufacturers, syphonmakers and the manufacturers of sporting goods.—World's Work.

Stocking the National Parks.
The United States is carrying on a very interesting work in exchanging the wild animals of one region for those of others—transplanting elk and deer and Rocky mountain bighorns from regions in the United States where they are plentiful to others where, so far as known, they have not lived. Some of the animals are being shipped long distances, says the Popular Science Monthly.

Wyoming is full of elk. The herds in the Jackson Hole country are the largest of any of North American wild animals since the days of the countless buffaloes. But the big Yosemite National park of California, with its three-quarters of a million acres, until recently had no elk, or at least only a very few scattered specimens. But the elk shipped in from Wyoming have become very much at home and are breeding and multiplying rapidly, adding to the charm and picturesqueness of this popular national playground.

Love and Marriage.
"First love is very apt not to be the lasting love," said Dr. Antoinette Konikow, speaking at the Boston School of Social Science.

"Young lovers try to excuse all the faults of the loved one because they are not in love with the individual, but with love. Hence they may not choose the partner with whom they will find their happiness in later years. Many a man and woman is glad by middle age that the first love was frustrated.

"Marriage should be based on love alone or it is immoral, and some change is necessary if marriage is to be saved from degradation. Real love always makes people better. Romantic love is the source of all the best things in life—the foundation of all the arts. And individual-happiness makes up the happiness of the race."—Boston Post.

Use of Bacon Drippings.
Bacon drippings make splendid shortening for light, flaky pie crust. It takes just a little less of the drippings than of ordinary lard or vegetable shortening. Use it for shortening in spice cake, gingerbread or any dark cake and note the delicious flavor.

Spread rye bread with a thin layer of the pure drippings and sprinkle a little salt on it. Add to this a thin slice of any salt meat and you will have a delicious and highly nutritious sandwich. The European housewife has long made use of such sandwiches for the between meal snack for growing boys and girls.

The Pygmy Hippopotamus.
One of the animals least known to the outside world is the pygmy hippopotamus of West Africa.

This animal is just what its name implies, a pygmy hippopotamus. It is much smaller than the common hippopotamus, being no larger than an ordinary or fair sized hog. It differs somewhat from the common hippo in the character of its teeth, and instead of spending its time in the rivers and lakes in large herds it wanders about through the jungles singly or in pairs, much after the manner of swine in search of mast.—London Spectator.

Just the Time.
"No, I have never played bridge before."

"So I should surmise," said the disgusted partner. "But how came you to enter an important tournament like this?"

"Oh, I thought it would be a good time to learn."—Louisville Courier.

All Wrong.
"Now, look here, Alice, I know every thing. You've been carrying on with another man. I even know that his name is Rupert."

"How ridiculous you are! First of all, I haven't flirted with any one, and, secondly, his name isn't Rupert."—Passing Show.

Profitable Writing.
"My writings bring in a lot of money every month."

"That so? I didn't know you were an author."

"I'm not. I'm the man that makes out the bills for our firm."—Detroit Free Press.

Trials of Authors.
"You do not know," Saint-Beuve wrote to George Sand, "what it is to remain a whole day with your head in your hands, squeezing your unfortunate brain to find a word."

Silent Heroes.
"Father," asked Tommy, "what are 'silent heroes'?"

"Married men, my boy," replied the father.—London Telegraph.

Might Have Changed History.

Here is the story of an averted tragedy which, if it had not been averted, might have changed the whole course of modern history in Europe. The time was about three weeks after Sadowa. The place was the little village of Pilsdorf, about thirty miles from Vienna. King William of Prussia and Bismarck were there, and they sat down on a terrace outside a small cafe to drink beer. Kern, an Austrian forester, saw them. He regarded them as the deadly enemies of his country. He was an excellent marksman, and he had his double barreled gun with him. Taking aim from behind cover, he was about to fire when his wife, seeing what he was after and fearing the consequences, clutched him by the coat-tails. He turned to argue with her, and before the argument was finished the king and his chancellor had disappeared. So nothing happened. But if Kern had been allowed to fire there might have been no German empire.

Seemed All Right.
"Bobbie, your face wants washing. Did you look at it in the glass this morning?" "No, mother, but it seemed all right when I felt it."—New York Sun.

Already Trained.
"I suppose you always prefer to enlist men who are not married?" I remarked to the sergeant who has charge of the recruiting station. "No; you're mistaken there," he hastened to reply. "I prefer married men every time. You see, we don't have to go to the trouble of teaching married men to obey."—Chicago News.

Want Further.
"Didn't I tell you that when you met a man in hard luck you ought to greet him with a smile?" said the wise and good counselor. "Yes," replied the flinty souled person. "I went even further than that. I gave him the grand laugh."

Best Way of Taking Iron.

Carbon Bisulfid for Bean and Pea Weevil

O. A. C., Corvallis Ore.,—Beans and peas stored for seed, showing large, round holes in the sides, are infested with weevils and need fumigation with carbon bisulfid gas before being planted, says A. L. Lovett, entomologist of the O. A. C. Experiment Station.

"The adult weevil is a small, olive-drab beetle that appears in the field at blossoming time and deposits eggs along the keel of the developing pods. The eggs hatch into grubs that enter and feed on the maturing seeds in which they are still present when the seed is stored."

Carbon bisulfid fumigation is the standard treatment. The tin or container in which the seeds are stored is made as nearly gas proof as possible. For each 15 bushels of seed one pound of carbon bisulfid is used. It may be poured over the seed or placed in shallow trays above them. The bin should be securely closed for 24 hours, then opened and thoroughly aired.

Caution should be used in handling the carbon bisulfid as it is very inflammable. Do not open near hot stove or use a light or smoke while treating the seed.

Another treatment for the weevil is to pour the seed into a vessel of boiling water. Before doing this have ready for instant use a supply of cold water which must immediately be added to the water containing the seeds. The infested seeds will float and may be skimmed off. This treatment is advisable only when the seeds can be planted at once.

Neither of these treatments should injure the vitality of the seed.

Miss Alice Drorbaugh, of Salem, was an over-Sunday guest at the Curtis Cole home in Linn county.
