Last Sunday, 11 cars loaded with 54 people left Stayton and went to Cascadia, where they spent the day. It was sort of a relationship party, as every one in the party was related to Joseph Fisher, and was also a sort of a get-together affair to meet Mrs. George Keetings, of Seattle, who is a sister of Mr. Fisher and is visiting here. The party left at 5:30 in the morning and took dinner at Wateoloo, returning in the evening.

Frank Lesley's Dodge car is looking a little bit bunged up as a result of a couple of young men, who were driving a Ford car on the streets of Salem, and did not look where they were going. Frank lost a cap off of one of the front wheels and the mud guard was somewhat twisted. But we understand that the Ford had to be taken to the doctor.

CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. Lee Tate is in receipt of a letter from Pressly N. Eskew in which he says that he wishes to thank the ladies of Stayton for their kindness in sending me the sweater. It is a good fit. His address is Private P. N. Eskew, H. D. A. Russell, Wpoming Bare Hospital.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men
Which taken at the flood leads on to fortune.
Omitted, all the voyage of our life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries
On such a full sea are we now afloat
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our venture."—Shakespeare.

Fortune, national or individual is as illusive as the rainbow. Man, whether he be aboriginal or covered with the vineer of civilization, is striving with all his power toward the attainment of onme purpose. And be it good or bad, the inexorable decree of fate calls "check," and—like the rainbow—the zenith of his aspirations is just beyond. As with the individuals, so with the nations. They rise and fall with the ebb and flow of the tides of time and their former glories are but memories strewn on the sands of yesterday. The nations of tonay yre to a certain extent repliess of those that were and are not. Infected by the ary rot of militarism and disregard of the rights of others they must fall by the wayside. For instance, Spin and Austria each had their sphere of dominance in world affairs.

Without regard to civil or religious liberty, Spain sought to acquire and maintain by force of arms. Holland remembers the Duke of Alva, while England has not forgotten the Aamada of Spain, although Spanish sovereignty is but an echo from the past. The house of Hapsburg cared naught for the consent of the governed and Austria reflects but a faint shadow of her former glory. The French revolution shattered the house of Bourbon and to a certain extent purified a decadent France. What of Germany and her dream of world supremacy? Goethe best answers this when he says,

"The ancient truth still runs its course
If you adopt the rule of force
And boldly seek your chosen goal
Hou risk your own, yourself,
your soul."
That is what Germany has done and is still risking.

Victor Hugo speaking of Napoleon said, "For this man to succeed would be to upset the laks of moral gravitation and destroy their equilibrium." This applies also to German intent. The super structure of German ambition rests on the quick sands of armed force and national dishonor and cannot but collapse.

To sum up, the ambition that is nearest to the right, either personal or national, will come nearest the goal. Of our own country and her ambition, I can do no better than to quote from a speech delivered at Boston in 1882 by Henry W. Grady of Georgia. "A mighty duty, sir, and a mighty inspiration impels every one of us today to lose in patriotic consecration whatever estranges, whatever divides. We, sir, are Americans and we fight for human liberty. The uplifting force of the American

Buy woolen goods now--

Every day the government is making new ruling curtailing the manufacturing of goods for civilian use. The demands for the army and navy---which must be supplied---are greater and greater.

The wool administrator at Washington has just annouced that not one pound of wool will be allotted to civilian use until the army and navy are both supplied.

Our stocks are now complete. Come and make your selection; the values are surprisingly low.
