DRUG ADDICTION

Always doubtful of arguments based on "big figures" and vast majorities, we have not been duly alarmed by the predictions that when prohibition sets in with real severity the country will turn to drugs—says Collier's. "There are now a million addicts, and the number will increase tenfold" has not seemed a particularly scientific statement. At the same time it is encouraging to have direct testimony bearing out our doubts. It is assumed that a larger proportion of drug addicts is found among the criminal classes than elsewhere. Dr. McNamara says that in the Cook County jail of 57,054 prisoners between 1913 and 1919 only 755 were habitual drug users. He disposes of the belief that crime is due to drug addiction as a "myth," and adds: "Surgeon General Gorgas in his annual report states the fact that 794,000 soldiers were examined by the army surgeons and only 403 were refused as drug users. This tells whether or not the American people are habitual users of narcotic or habit-forming drugs."

Don't it make a fellow sore when you get a good sensational article and have the blamed thing all written up so it will read just right—and then along comes some of the main trump's friends and says: "Say if I were you I wouldn't say anything about that little case. In fact they don't want anything said about it. Say! don't it make you sore?" Someone is always taking the joy out of life.

Governor Ben Olcott has been having the time of his life the past few weeks—or since the air ships have been hovering around us. Ben got right in and went up. He stayed with the blamed thing and it felt so good that he went to sleep while crossing over Mt. Shasta. Gee! "It must be a g-r-a-n-d and g-l-o-r-i-o-u-s feeling."
