HOW "OLD ORDER CHANGETH"

British Miner No Longer the Grimy Individual He Has Been So Frequently Pictured.

A new type of miner is being evolved at Atherton, Lancashire, through the growing popularity of the baths at Messrs. Fletcher, Burrows and company's collieries. At first only 10 per cent of the men used them; now the figure is 50 per cent. The miner now goes to work in tweeds and brown boots instead of his old-fashioned clothes and clogs. He no longer benches the seats of tramways and railway carriages with the grime of his calling. Nor does he drive his wife to despair with the amount of work he brings into the house each day. He goes home spruce and well groomed, with no signs of the weariness so characteristic of the men "coming up."

"All the young men use the baths," said the keeper of the bathhouse. "Some of the older men don't."

"They are learning sense," volunteered an old miner. "And I wonder the women didn't teach it to some of them a bit sooner."

"Convenience!" His eyes twinkled. "Why, man, if I wanted to jazz I could bring my dress clothes here and be ready for the ball twenty minutes after I got out of the cage. No, I'm not going to start jazzing—not at my time of life. But I might be going to a directors' banquet one of these days. You never know in these times." Fifteen minutes suffice for a miner's bath. Men in a hurry take a little less, dandles a little more. They find their own soap and towels.—London Times

Where Allies Got Timber.

Timber was essential to military operations, as carried on during the war against the Hun. The chief war theater was northern France and timber was available largely because France had practiced forestry for generations.

One hundred years ago the southwestern corner of France, extending from Bordeaux to the Pyrenees mountains was almost as treeless as the prairie, and was fringed by sand dunes which were constantly in movement, burying fields and houses and even whole villages. Napoleon called in engineers and foresters. These men succeeded in holding the dunes in place by planting with maritime pine; and then they planted up the whole interior of the region with the same tree. During the war this region was the largest source of lumber not only for the French army, but for the British and American armies as well.

Trees as Aerials for Wireless.

It is difficult indeed to find something really new in radio communication. Things which are hailed as new in the daily press are more often apt to prove merely developments or improvements along well-known lines, and it is in that class that the recent tree aerial tests at Washington fall. As far back as 1907, experiments were carried out in which trees were employed as aerials. In the recent tests messages were received over quite a distance by means of tree aerials. It was also pointed out that messages could be transmitted through the agency of tree aerials over short distances. However, in view of the remarkably sensitive receiving apparatus available today, the use of tree aerials is no more remarkable than it was back in 1907, with the relatively crude instruments of that time.—Scientific American.
