ALL BOW TO MY LORD TIGER

Natives of the East Most Willingly Accord Him Royal Rank—Is Sacred From Attack.

Of all the animals deified in the East none is regarded with more awe than my lord tiger. Especially throughout Siam and Indo-China, the tiger is king. Shrines are built and sacrifices made to him; he is as sacred from the attack of the natives as is the white elephant of Siam.

If there are fewer tigers in this part of the East today, it is due largely to the efforts of western sportsmen who occasionally can persuade, bribe, or threaten a few natives to aid them in a hunt. Any such lack of respect on the part of the natives is, however, looked upon frowningly by their neighbors who seem to fear that the tiger will forget the exact individual who attacked him and remember only the community.

Native reverence goes so far as to allow a tiger to prowl undisturbed about a village night after night, attacking and sometimes killing those so unfortunate as to cross his path. In the day the sacred beast retires to his mountain domain, where he stays entirely hidden until nightfall.

It is obvious that the royal tiger rules entirely by fear. Awe-inspiring he is himself, and his supremacy is helped along by the attitude of the natives. To the tiger are attributed all manner of supernatural powers. It is held that he always knows and tracks down those who offend him; he can even turn himself into a human being, the better to seek out his enemies.

Man's Adam's Apple.

"Scientists are inclined to accept the theory," says John Walter Harrington in Popular Science Monthly, "that man came by long descent from ill-formed, spineless things that came to life by chemical action, probably in some tepid mineral spring, and found their way to the ocean. There came the fish, which, as soon as they got backbones, began to develop something like the Adam's apple. A man without an Adam's apple would be a poor fellow. From the primitive forms of the ancient seas are believed to have come the mammals, from which spring the human race. It is a long story."

"Don't Cheat Yourself" says the Good Judge

There's nothing saved by chewing ordinary tobacco. A little chew of that good rich-tasting tobacco goes a lot farther, and its good taste lasts all the way through. Little chew—lasting—satisfying. That's why it's a real saving to buy this class of tobacco.
