

Roosters Help Build Bridge on National Highway

Chickens have now entered in to good roads development. At least four roosters have, the fowls being known as "Lloyd George, Clemenceau, Orlando and Wilson, having been brought here from France. They were presented by President Wilson to a delegation of Alabama citizens, the birds to be auctioned off, the funds to go toward completion of a bridge across the Tombigbee river on the great "Dixie Highway"—a continental highway link. President Wilson is shown here presenting the birds to Senator Bankhead as the Alabama delegation looks on.

It is predicted that in ten—maybe five—years from now, the sky will be marked out in regular lines of air travel, as the earth now is banded with steel rails. Stations and eating houses probably will be established high in the air, where the big limiteds will draw up alongside captive dining balloons for the usual 25 minutes for dinner. Aerated water will be served, and even the prices will be inflated. In this vision is seen but one feature which harks back to 1918: The dining-room girls will still be wearing those solemn, ugly black dresses, radiating the same old gloom even to the last table farthest back in the farthest corner.
