A YEAR OLD Standard Starts Second Year of Existence

This issue the Standard begins the second year of its existence. Taking into consideration the close financial condition of the year just past, we believe the paper has done remarkably well. General office business has increased from the start and the number of subscribers has grown constantly until now we have the largest list of any paper in the Santiam valley.

We have made some improvements in the paper during the year, and if conditions remain agreeable we expect to make more the coming year.

The publisher of the Standard greatly appreciates the patronage given the paper during the year by the advertisers, subscribers, and those in need of printing. We have endeavored to merit your patronage and shall continue to do so.

We desire to thank all our correspondents for their good work during the year. All have labored faithfully and we believe their efforts are appreciated by Standard readers, as we know they are by the editor.

There is a reciprocity between the publisher of a local paper and the business men and residents of a community that ought to be fully appreciated on both sides. No industry in a community gives as much for nothing as does the average local paper. There is a limit, however, beyond which the publisher of a paper cannot go in the matter of expense for increasing the circulation of his publication. When a local publisher is seen to be making a decided effort to place a paper before the people that will be a credit to the community and increase the paper's circulation in order to carry the message of the business men to a larger number of people, the business man should reciprocate by sending that message and by making it so interesting that those people will come to Stayton to do trading with the merchants of the town.

Again thanking all for their patronage and kind consideration in the past, and trusting that at this time next year Stayton will have two railroads and that all the Standard's friends and their friends may be on the high road to prosperity, we remain
Very truly,
The Editor.

Chicory in France.

Chicory, so extensively raised in France, is harvested either by hand or by plowing. As fast as the plants in one line are pulled the roots are gathered in heaps after the removal of the leaves and are roughly cleaned. They are then transported to the factories, where they are mechanically washed in flowing water and dumped on a perforated conveyor that permits them to drain while traveling toward the root cutters. The roots, when cut in small pieces, are conveyed to the malt kilns or special driers, where they remain thirty-six hours or more, and after cooling they are bagged. The chicory, having now become friable, passes into a series of crushers. After each crushing the broken material is pushed through sifters that divide it into four grades. From the crushers the chicory goes to the roasting retorts and then receives a final manipulation, that of tinting, which consists in giving the grains a coating of impalpable chicory dust. The last operation is that of packing the chicory, either by hand or by machinery.—Argonaut.

Hearing but Not Listening.

In the course of a visit to Nagpur, the capital of the central provinces, writes Mr. Stanley Coxon in his Indian reminiscences, I heard of an amusing ending to a civil case. It was an appeal case, and on one side was a Mr. Stanyon, an English barrister, and on the other a number of native pleaders. The arguments on both sides had been heard, and the case closed for judgment.

Suddenly one of the native pleaders got up and addressed the court once more. Mr. Stanyon suffered it for some time; but, losing patience, he also stood up and, addressing the court, said, "Your honor, I would beg with all respect to point out to the court that my learned friend opposite is entirely out of order in addressing the court, and if I may be permitted to say so the court has no right to be listening to him."

The court, who at that time was writing, put his head over the desk and said, "Mr. Stanyon, it's a great piece of impertinence on your part to assume that the court is listening to him."

Moving Picture Shows.

An observer says the reason that all classes like motion picture plays is that each person puts into the mouths of the silent actors the exclamations, words and lines that he himself would use under like circumstances.

Incidents and situations are flashed on the screen, but the spectator tells the unspoken story to himself, and there is no possibility of artificial, strained or incomprehensible dialogue. What the spectator imagines is the thing that is natural to him. To one who watches Hamlet with Yorick's skull the words of the play may come, "Imperious Caesar, dead and turned to clay, might stop a hole to keep the wind away." To another's imagination Hamlet says, "Well, we all gotta come to it."
