MEDICAL,

State laws include the stipulation that a facility has to be at least 1,000 feet away from a school. In Keizer, the rule is 1,500 feet, in addition to being 1,000 feet from any public building and 1,000 feet away from any other dispensary.

"It's extremely hard to find a location within those parameters, and to then find an owner willing to let you in," Robison said. "We're in one of the only locations available in Keizer. We were able to talk with the building owner here and talk about the science of medical marijuana so he had more of an understanding what we're doing. There's a stigma people (in such places) are just getting high."

Nate Brown, director of Community Development for Keizer, noted during the Dec. 15 council meeting the facility would be opening soon.

"We processed our first medical marijuana dispensary application and are in the process of issuing that license,"

Brown said at the time. "We don't know how long until they open. It's up to them. It's their first one and our first one."

Sam Litke, senior planner for Keizer, noted Robison submitted his application "just before Thanksgiving."

Robison studied horticulture in high school in North Carolina and later at Chemeketa Community College after moving to Keizer seven years ago, with intentions to open a nursery. But plans changed when he saw his father die from leukemia.

"He took dozens of pills in the morning and dozens more at night," Robison said. "He had five rounds of chemo in 90 days. He took an extreme amount of pills. Most of them were to counteract the side effects of other pills. From that, I saw the severe need for medical marijuana."

After that, Robison started looking at the health benefits of various types of medical marijuana. One of his main goals with his own facility is to educate others about those health benefits.

"We try to educate people, not just sell," he said. "We inform people what each drug does. To me, this is a pharmacy."

Robison emphasizes he is not a doctor and that someone cannot just come in to get medical marijuana.

"They have to have a prescription from a doctor to come into the back room," he said. "They have to have been approved by OMP (Oregon Medical Plan). People have to go to their doctor for approved ailments. They have to be continued ailments. We haven't had anyone come in that has abused the system. That's not the medical marijuana community."

Robison only sells organically grown marijuana that has been tested at a lab in Albany. The testing shows the makeup of each plant, information Robison shows patients to help them decide which is correct for their particular needs.

The marijuana Robison sells is done on a consignment basis.

"If a grower has excess, they can bring them to a dispensary and get reimbursed," Robison said. "We don't make much profit. This is not as profitable as some people think."

Robison and his staff keep a close eye on trends in their ever-changing industry. He has an attorney who tracks law changes pertaining to marijuana.

All employees at Alpha Alternative Solutions had to undergo background checks and fingerprinting at the Keizer Police Department. Though he's had his battles with the city, Robison has nothing but praise for members of the KPD.

"The Keizer Police Department has been good to work with," he said. "They have been very fair. Everyone there has been respectful and fair. We jumped through all the city's hoops and are glad to be here. We have many patients who are glad they don't have to travel as far now."

Robison noted his dispensary is open 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. every day, including Christmas. That goes back to his dad's struggles.

"My dad had so many medicines, sometimes he would forget to refill and would have to wait two or three days for the pharmacy to open again," Robison said. "I always want to be available to our patients."

BUSTED,

"During a search inside the home, officers located (Lopez's) clothing," Goodman said. "Officers also determined that after (Lopez) had broken into this residence, he drank the homeowner's alcohol, used their hot tub and then took a shower in the master bathroom."

Lopez was charged with two counts of burglary and one count of criminal mischief, with a bail of $82,500.

Jeff Kuhns, deputy chief with the KPD, said officers have become somewhat used to dealing with people with a lack of clothing lately.

"Sadly, encountering individuals in various states of dress is all too common in our profession, both suspects and victims alike," Kuhns said. "In just the last couple of months there are at least three incidents that I'm aware of, including this one, that involved naked individuals. One was a naked subject found in an apartment complex parking lot who was suffering from a mental problem. The other was a naked female who fled from a residence in the Meadows when there was a disturbance."

Since Lopez had no clothing, officers put a yellow disposable emergency blanket around him so a picture could be taken.

"We have no idea why the suspect made his way to this Statts Lake neighborhood, but we located his vehicle parked in a neighboring driveway later on Sunday morning when a resident called us to investigate," Kuhns said. "So far there is no known association between the suspect and victim residences or information as to why he chose Keizer."

A burglar taking a shower in a home he just burglarized also isn't new in Keizer. In July 2013, Francis V. Lucero was arrested when homeowners returned home and found Lucero taking a shower after breaking into their residence on Appleblossom Avenue. In that case, Lucero was arrested after a brief struggle with responding officers.

Oregon School of Massage

2111 Front Street NE • Salem • 503-585-8912
OregonSchoolOfMassage.com

Oregon School of Massage was founded by owner and president, Ray Siderius, in 1984 and opened the Salem location in 1999. OSM is state a licensed and regionally accredited private, professional school. We are committed to providing holistic education integrating body, mind, heart and spirit.

Touch is central to our philosophy as a powerful form of communication, carrying complex messages for both giver and receiver. As a result, practitioners must be mindful of this to provide a safe and supportive environment for their clients. OSM students are asked to share their own experiences to explore their conscious and unconscious beliefs around touch. This dialogue helps students clarify their own beliefs and needs.

Training at OSM is much more than learning massage techniques and human anatomy. It is the subtle integration of emotion, knowledge, technical skills and intuition. We ask students to look at their education as a period of personal growth, as well as training for a new and rewarding career.

Western and Eastern focus programs offer a flexible schedule in both Portland and Salem, designed to suit adult students who want to individualize their learning program.
