Comcast helping Big Toy project

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

A cable TV company learned about a big park project in Keizer thanks to e-mail.

That led to Tim Goodman, director of Government Affairs for Comcast Cable in Oregon and Southwest Washington, publicly thanking Janet Carlson at the March 2 Keizer City Council meeting.

Carlson, the Marion County commissioner, is co-chair of the fundraising task force for the Big Toy playground project, scheduled to be built by community volunteers over a five-day period in June at Keizer Rapids Park.

Part of the public thanking included a $1,000 check and a pledge to help in the future.

“Sometime back in the early fall Commissioner Carlson e-mailed me some information about a park here in Keizer, that you guys were developing a Big Toy,” Goodman said. “She indicated some financial help might be needed. Upon her request, I put in a request to Comcast. I was able to get a little bit of money.”

But that wasn’t all. “In addition to that, I believe you guys are looking at a June construction date,” Goodman said. “I talked to our local tech op who manages all the local (Comcast) cable guys in Salem-Keizer. They are interested in putting together a team to come help ya’ll put it together.”

Goodman then explained why he wanted to do the presentation while sitting next to Carlson.

“I have to give Commissioner Carlson credit, because we wouldn’t have known about it if it hadn’t been for her bending my ear a little bit,” he said. “I’ve had the check with me for a couple of months, but we were trying to coordinate a time when we could both be here together. I have a check for $1,000 I wanted to give you tonight, and a commitment for a work crew for when you do the construction in June. That’s why we’re here tonight. I wanted to give her some recognition.”

Carlson noted she had responded to what seemed like an open invitation from Goodman.

“When he asked me, ‘What can we do to help in Marion County?’ I said, well, we’ve been working on this project in Keizer,” Carlson said.

According to Goodman, the project hit a nerve for him since he was formerly a parks and recreation person for 14 years in California.

“We did a project similar to this back in the day,” Goodman said. “I know how this works. I have a check for whoever wants to take it.”

Mayor Cathy Clark had councilor Marlene Quinn, chair of the Community Build Task Force, accept the check and pose for a picture with Goodman and Carlson.

The following evening, Carlson gave a fundraising update during the monthly CBTF meeting. Carlson noted she’ll be talking about the project this spring on Comcast Newsmakers, while fundraising co-chair Richard Walsh has been talking to churches about getting volunteers for the June 10 to 14 build dates. She also commended former mayor Lore Christopher for “going like gangbusters” in getting financial commitments.

According to figures from Carlson, recent contributions have included $2,500 from Mountain West Investment Corporation, an additional $2,000 from Keizer Rotary for a swing set (in addition to $30,000 already contributed by Rotary to the project), $5,000 from Keizer Elks for a log cabin, $1,000 from Northwest League of Professional Baseball for a bench and $8,000 from Salem-Keizer Volcanoes for a new volcano slide, which was highlighted in last week’s Keizertimes.

Carlson’s figures show more than $223,000 has been raised. With the budget recently being lowered to $319,000 in light of a cheaper surface, approximately 70 percent of the funds have been raised. “This is looking real good,” Carlson said.

Carlson noted sometimes additional funding ends up being a wash, as exemplified by the funding from the Volcanoes. “Another interesting thing is sometimes there are puts and takes,” she said. “The Volcanoes are providing money, but that’s also an expense we didn’t have previously.”

Carlson also emphasized fundraising isn’t necessarily done once build date arrives.

“Even if we don’t reach the $95,000 left to raise by then, there will still be people who want to donate later once it is built,” she said. “We’re not going to say it’s over until it’s over. The build date is not the end date for fundraising. We will probably need to think of ongoing maintenance costs and grants for activities in the park. June may not be the end.”

Road trip for Arts Commission

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

There have been tours of Keizer organized by city groups like the Keizer Parks and Recreation Board.

But one of the city groups organizing a road trip? That’s a bit more unusual.

The Keizer Arts Commission – soon to be renamed Keizer Public Arts Commission – has scheduled a March 26 road trip to Grand Ronde.

The purpose? To look at totem pole art.

In case your first question is why an art group from Keizer would be traveling to look at totem poles, the answer is actually simple. There are two Douglas firs in front of the Keizer Civic Center that were trimmed a couple of months ago.

Jill Hagen and Lore Christopher from the KAC have a shared vision of a local artist doing art on one of the trees, with members of a local tribe doing art on the other. Hagen has been in contact with a Grand Ronde tribal group to explore the idea of doing a totem pole in front of city hall.

During the Feb. 24 KAC meeting, Hagen gave her update.

“They want us as a commission to go out there and see the standing totems they have in Grand Ronde,” Hagen said. “They want us to visit as a group, do a presentation to us and then do a presentation to our group here. They said the images they’d be using are more authentic and local to this area. They would approach us in a sacred manner.”

A potential issue would have to be worked out.

“The pieces would have to come down for carving,” Hagen said. “Pine is not the best thing (for carving) because it has knots. They like cedar the best.”

As such, Hagen said the current standing Douglas fir wouldn’t be good.

“They want it to be on the ground level while they work on it,” she said. “These are standing. That will not work for them.”

KAC member Rick Day, owner of Advantage Precast in Keizer, said cedar logs could be put up once they are finished on the ground.

“We could do concrete pits and then put the wood in there,” Day said.
