

COUNCIL, continued from Page A2

Clark is glad to have the position filled.

"On the long list of things (former) Mayor Lore Christopher didn't tell me, at the top was the calls and e-mails you would get about code issues," Clark said. "These are real issues that affect livability."

• Sherrie Gottfried and Jill Bonney-Hill from the Keizer Points of Interest Committee gave an update on recent discussion regarding a request to move a kiosk honoring Marie Dorion and local Japanese Americans out of the Pfc. Ryan J. Hill Memorial Park. A story on the request ran in the May 1 issue of the Keizertimes.

"We feel the kiosk should remain, but we support any other recognition (for veterans) at the park," Bonney-Hill said.

Gottfried pointed to a couple of reasons for that decision being made.

Siri Scales introduced herself at the May 4 Keizer City Council meeting. Scales will be the youth councilor for the city council next school year.

"We all agreed the park was named for Ryan Hill, but it was not to be dedicated as a memorial park," Gottfried said. "The kiosk was put in with donated funds. It would be misleading to those people who donated to put it there (to move it)."

Councilors took no action on the topic.

• Two youth liaisons have already been named for next school year. Siri Scales will be the youth councilor for the Keizer City Council while Emily Brito will be the youth liaison for the Keizer Public Arts Commission. Scales is currently the sophomore class representative at McNary High School.

"I want to be active," Scales said.

Clark, who has helped find youth councilors for years, was thrilled to have the positions filled already.

"This is the earliest since I've been on council that we've appointed a youth councilor for the next year," said the first-year mayor, who was previously on council for eight years.

Most of the contestants were recruited by former McNary High School teacher Linda Baker from honors English classes.

Falcon said the most challenging part of the program came early on.

"It was the opening number with all the little sisters, we put a lot of work into that," she said.

For Rushton, the night was a mixture of relief and sorrow as each portion of the program passed.

"I kept thinking, 'Well, that's the last time we'll do the fitness routine, that's the last time we answer the questions.' But, it feels awesome to have all our hard work pay off," Rushton said.

Though it looked like a classic Model A, Wescott mainly used contemporary Ford Pinto components. Even the green paint was a Pinto color.

Somewhere around 1983, Woody traded Sweet Pea to a friend in exchange for a boat. Sweet Pea was traded a couple of more times before ending up in a storage shed.

Woody didn't see the car again until 2000, when he saw it in a garage in Albany.

"I asked the guy if he wanted to sell it but he didn't," Woody said. "The car had stuff piled all over it and it was getting rusty. I toyed with the idea of getting the car back."

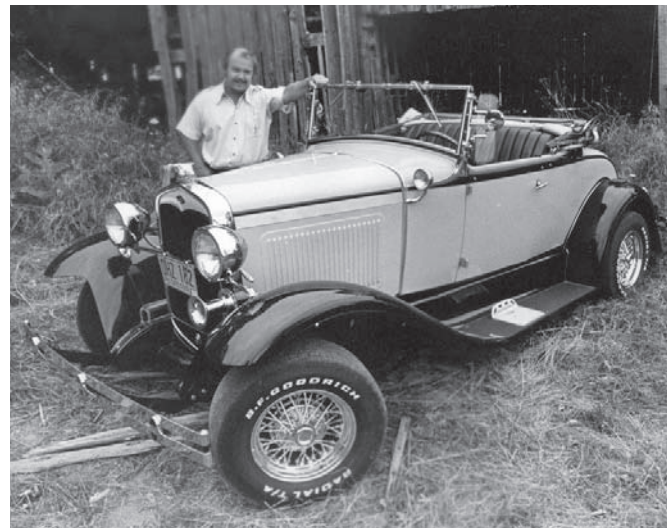

The idea was fleeting, however. Until last year, that is, after Screamer had been restored to car show-winning glory, including at the Keizer Rev-Up Car Show. Screamer and Sweet Pea will be at Sunday's show, which starts at 9 a.m. at the Keizer Elks Lodge parking lot.

"In 2014 I had the desire to find the car, get it and restore it," Woody said. "It was another heirloom car. It started bugging me that I didn't have the car."

It bugged Woody more when the Department of Motor Vehicles wouldn't give him the name of Sweet Pea's owner. Woody hired an attorney who found the name. It was the man Woody had talked to in 2000.

That man had passed away and left the car to his children, who had the car in storage. When Woody went to the Albany warehouse and saw Sweet Pea, he had a good feeling.

"I knew I was going to get the car back," Woody said. "I was willing to pay what it was worth."

Submitted

A proud Jim Woody poses with Sweet Pea shortly after taking delivery in the spring of 1975.

Jim Morgan was willing to sell Woody the car, but wanted Woody to come up with a price.

"We talked about the history of the car," Woody said. "I'd heard (Morgan) had turned down an offer of $17,000 for the car. I'm standing there with the car and I've got the desire. I offered $20,000 and we shook hands on it. He had won the lottery and so had I."

Woody could see Sweet Pea wasn't in prime shape like it had been 30 years earlier.

"When I got the car back, it was rough," he said. "I wasn't happy to see it in that shape, but I was happy it was in one piece and it was in the area."

Woody recalled Morgan nearly fell over at the offer of $20,000. As the two men talked, Woody explained he would make the car as original as possible and show it in memory of Wescott, who passed away in 2009.

"He said, 'that's fantastic,'" Woody said. "We both choked up. Then he said, 'You know what, I'm going to sell you the car for $18,000.' Now it was my turn to almost fall over."

Woody got the car just after last year's Iris Festival and had plenty of work to, including rebuilding the carburetor, hoses, chrome, upholstery and the top. He also had the fenders redone.

"It took me an awful long time to do it, because I wanted to do it myself," Woody said. "It ended up costing $8,000 to $9,000. I've done it enough times, I should have known better. There was a ton of stuff to do. It took me a long time. I went up until the end of February getting it ready for the Portland Roadster Show."

Woody is putting on an addition to his shop, which will be the parking area for Sweet Pea and Screamer, in addition to Woody's 1963 Ford Falcon and the 1990 Chevrolet IROC Camaro convertible displayed at last May's car show.

But of course, Woody is also thinking of more potential projects.

"It would be fun to have an original 1930 Model A coupe," he said. "I once had a 1955 Pontiac hardtop that would be nice to have. But I'm running out of time. I'm getting too old."
