Today in History

In Dayton, Tennessee, the so-called "Monkey Trial" begins with John Thomas Scopes, a young high school science teacher, accused of teaching evolution in violation of a Tennessee state law that prohibited teaching "any theory that denies the story of the Divine Creation of man as taught by the Bible." It was one of the most famous trials in U.S. history.

Task force talks signage, kiosk

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

Work on the Big Toy project is almost done.

But since it's not, the Community Build Task Force (CBTF) had one last meeting in its current form.

A smaller work group will continue to meet for the next year, likely on the first Tuesday each month as the CBTF did for more than two years.

CBTF chair Marlene Parsons will continue to oversee the smaller group, which will retain members Ron Freeman, David Loudon and Brandon Smith plus roll in fundraising committee members Richard Walsh, Lore Christopher and Janet Carlson.

The main goal at Tuesday's meeting was to finalize details related to the official dedication and grand opening of the play structure at Keizer Rapids Park, which was built last month by hundreds of volunteers. The official dedication is set for Aug. 29, tentatively set for 2 to 5 p.m. Speakers could potentially include Governor Kate Brown and U.S. Congressman Kurt Schrader, as Christopher is working to secure that.

Much of the discussion dealt with what kind of signage to put on a kiosk to recognize project sponsors and volunteers. The kiosk will be four-sided, with dimensions of 4 feet by 4 feet. There will also be plaques to recognize sponsors who paid for individual components, with the plaques going on or near the components.

"We want to get the kiosk built, but we need information to put on there," Parsons said. "We want to make sure we fulfill the promise to sponsors, but we also don't want to overwhelm the thing."

Project general coordinator Mark Caillier said Sign Crafters will be doing work on the signs for free. However, he and Public Works director Bill Lawyer both emphasized the need to get information for signs figured out as quickly as possible in order for things to be ready by late August.

"The sign work needs to be done by August 1 to get signs printed, designed, all of that," Lawyer said. "Sign Crafters has been great, but we need to give them time to get (the signs) in their schedule."

That led to some concern for Walsh, since the fundraising committee wasn't scheduled to tackle that subject until next month.

"We were going to have one more meeting where we would get the final numbers from Bill, focus on deficits and things like that," Walsh said. "I thought our meeting would be the first week of August."

Lawyer noted confusion about seemingly different discussions and again emphasized signs would have to be submitted by Aug. 1 in order to be done on time.

The fundraising committee will meet sometime in July, with one task being to finalize the list of donors and to make sure donation levels are accurate.

"We need to go over this list," Parsons said. "For example, the City of Keizer is a diamond sponsor, but is not even on the list. We need fundraising to go over the entire list, to make sure we are correct."

Parsons had suggestions about what to put on the sides of the kiosk.

"One idea is to list the donors," she said. "Two, we can also honor the task force members and the 15 construction captains that worked out there each day. That's a big piece of the project right there."

Lawyer suggested one side of the kiosk could be a list of rules such as no pets, food or drink on the play structure, which officially opened for usage June 20. Caillier suggested one side could have a bulletin board or a picture collage. Parsons liked that idea and suggested the history of the project could be listed.

Caillier said he will be building the kiosk on or about July 18.

Just when it seemed discussion was over, Christopher entered the room and noted she had been selling sponsorships with a promise of more recognition.

"Why can't we do what we promised?" Christopher asked.

Parsons responded, "We're looking at something that fits with the toy."

Christopher wanted to make sure sponsors were properly recognized by donation amount.

"We put our word on the line," she said. "As long as we can put the sponsors on there that's fine."

Parsons noted other recognition would have to be done as well, dating back to the November 2013 Design Day early in the project.

"We made a promise to the people in the community that night they would be on a sign as well," Parsons said. "We promised to the elementary school children we would put up a blurb that they designed it, though not individual names."

Parsons noted since she is now retired, she will e-mail donors a picture of what their sign will look like.

Discussion then continued at length about sign recognition and how to convert in-kind labor to dollar amounts until Smith had had enough.

"I think we've gone way too far on this," he said. "The recognition discussion has gone too far. People who came out wanted to build it for their community. They didn't want their hours listed. No one here cares about the quantity of hours or the dollar amount. We're recognizing people who came out. Valuing that has gone way off base...Everyone will say, 'I was one of those 700 people' and that will be good enough for them."
