

Councilor Ryan rips transit

KEIZERTIMES/Craig Murphy
Allan Pollock, general manager of Salem-Keizer Transit, presents information about route changes at a Keizer City Council work session on Monday. However, information he presented later about funding drew the ire of councilor Amy Ryan.

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

The intent of Monday's Keizer City Council work session was to hear from Salem Keizer Transit officials and board members about recent transit route changes and possible future plans.

Those items were indeed discussed.

They were overshadowed, however, by criticisms about information regarding the proposed payroll tax on next month's ballot being shared.

Councilor Amy Ryan, a small business owner who has been vocal in her disagreement over the proposed .21 percent payroll tax, voiced repeated concerns about the process.

Salem-Keizer Transit general manager Allan Pollock and Bob Krebs, president of the transit board, discussed what Phase 2 of the Moving Forward plan would bring if funded: week-end service, later week-night service and a student pass program for middle school and high school students.

Ryan

"It's a program we had several years ago," Pollock said. "When the funding went away, the program went away. But it was a highly successful program. We provided nearly one million rides a year to students in this program."

Krebs pointed out the .21 percent proposed payroll tax is much smaller than the .7 percent payroll tax in the Eugene area for Lane Transit District, which has the services Salem-Keizer Transit would like to have. The main funding for LTD is $31.5 million from the payroll tax.

That discussion got Ryan going.

"It was my understanding we would discuss phase 1 and changes made," Ryan said. "We were told no decisions would be made, we would take no stand and we would not discuss the budget. I would like to express my frustration. I do feel after this presentation the opposition should get a chance to meet with us. They were not invited to the meeting."

Mayor Cathy Clark acknowledged some of the slides shown by transit leaders have been used to promote the ballot measure.

Please see RYAN, Page A6

Chief explains the KFD bond

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

The Keizer Fire District is seeking to raise $6.2 million over the next 20 years to replace aging equipment with a general obligation bond measure on the ballot this November.

The measure, No. 24-389, is expected to have an estimated average rate of about 14 cents per $1,000 of assessed property value. For a home valued at $200,000, the homeowner would pay $28 per year.

The bond will replace a 1996 measure approved by voters to pay for the Keizer Fire Station, which will be paid off in February 2016. The average rate on that bond was 16 cents per $1,000 of assessed value.

"We very specifically didn't want to add one bond on top of another so we timed this one to come online after the bond for the fire station expired," said Joe Van Meter, president of the Keizer Fire Board.

An aging fleet of vehicles has left KFD in the lurch more often than it would like in recent years. One of its ambulances, the newest one, spent nine months out of service in 2013, putting KFD officials in the position of borrowing equipment from Salem Fire Department to maintain expected coverage.

"We chose not to purchase the top-of-the-line vehicle when we purchased it in 2008, but we've also put more miles on it than we ever intended because it was the first-out vehicle when the older two were in for maintenance," said Jeff Cowan, Keizer fire chief.

The situation became so dire over the summer that the Fire Board opted to use some operational funds to order two new ambulances. The first will be owned outright by the district. If the bond measure fails, the second one will be converted to a lease for $20,000 per year.

Please see KFD, Page A12

KPD cop honored for Putnam case

Submitted

Chris Nelson (left) from the Keizer Police Department was honored last week for his work on the Laurin Putnam drug case.

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

As far as he's concerned, Chris Nelson and others were simply doing their jobs under less than ideal circumstances.

Still, the Keizer Police Department detective and Garrett Roelof were recognized Oct. 8 with an award presentation ceremony at the United States Attorney's Office in Portland for their investigation in the Laurin Putnam case. Putnam, 21, died of heroin overdose in April 2012, but the investigation led to 10 drug traffickers being arrested.

Kathleen Bickers, the assistant U.S. Attorney who prosecuted the case, presented Nelson and Roelof their awards in a large conference room full of federal prosecutors. Bickers noted it was the most successful Len Bias investigation in the history of the Portland office.

Bias was the second pick in the 1986 National Basketball Association draft but died of a drug overdose shortly after. In 1988, Congress passed stricter drug laws known as the Len Bias Law.

Please see NELSON, Page A7

Taking the bump of brain injury

KEIZERTIMES/Eric A. Howald
Keizerite Thomas Lucas was working toward a career in pro wrestling when a car-on-bike collision left him with a traumatic brain injury. He's now pursuing his GED, and a job.

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the Keizertimes

There is one memory of his budding pro wrestling career that survived Thomas Lucas' traumatic brain injury: getting a piledriver from the vertically-challenged Dink the Clown.

"He showed up while I was in Portland and he was one of the main coaches for the pro wrestling school there. He was teaching us how to take a head bump like when someone's piledriving you," said Lucas, 25. A "bump" is pro wrestling parlance for a fall.

Lucas' path to this point in his life has had many twists and turns, but he's got the type of persona you can see taking a mic and calling out his next opponent in front of television camera. Even battling with his memory problems, he can fill a room with his easy-going, open-to-it-all attitude.

He credits WWE's Mick Foley for his own calling to the squared-circle rope opera.

"He sacrificed his body for the fans, and he proved you didn't have to have six-pack abs or 24-inch pythons," Lucas said. "It didn't matter if he was the disturbed Mankind or the lovable, sweet hipster Dude Love, he always kept me watching."

Given the big personalities and shock-and-awe theatrics of pro wrestling, Lucas got a bit of a wake-up call when he went to wrestle with the Boys & Girls Club as a fifth grader in Arkansas. The first day of practice he learned no one would be going through a table.

"I figured it was a start. Normally, a wrestler won't win his first year. What's important is learning the moves and building off that. I scored one victory my first season and the adrenaline from that just kept me going. I went in and was undefeated for the next season and the four seasons after that," Lucas said.

It was while wrestling for Boys & Girls Club that Lucas had one of his more eye-opening matches.

"I wrestled a match with a kid from the school for the blind. It was cool watching people with differing abilities and learning how to start matches and keep hand contact with him so he knew where I was at," he said.

For reasons he wouldn't realize until much later, it was a match that had an indelible impact on him.

Lucas moved back to the Pacific Northwest as a sophomore in high school, but kept on wrestling. He learned in his junior year that he was likely to be held back and decided to drop out.

"After I dropped out, I was going to go to JobCorps and study welding, but then I heard about a wrestling school in Portland. I learned how to sign up, but it was $100 a week," Lucas said.

He talked it over with his father, James, who he credits as his biggest role model in life, and decided together to give it a shot. Before starting, Lucas wanted to take a trip to visit family in Arkansas.

While visiting, Lucas started coaching other high school wrestlers and discovered another school offering lessons in pro wrestling for half the cost.

Please see LUCAS, Page A7

Transit tax discussion
PAGE A2

Trucker is a true diamond
PAGE A5

Celts notch big win
PAGE A8

Homecoming Court at MHS
PAGE A12

Get 'em started young

Mary Opra, left, helps her grandniece Charlotte Rae Bauer, 22 months, with lunch at the Keizer Chamber of Commerce luncheon Oct. 13 at Keizer Quality Suites.

KEIZERTIMES/
Craig Murphy

0 88267 02324 6

capitol SUBARU

capitolsubaru.com

Your Way On The Parkway!

CONQUER WINTER.

WITH A NEW SUBARU
& 2 SEASON PASSES

ON NOW!
PERFECT WAY TO GET READY FOR SKI SEASON!

Season passes are provided courtesy of Mt. Hood Skibowl and Timberline and are only valid for the 2015-2016 winter season. Promotional passes do not receive Powder Alliance privileges. See capitolsubaru.com for details.