Plan coming together for next mural

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

Have a desire to paint a fire truck on a public mural?

Or how about a marching band?

Those are two of several images still available for next summer's second Keizer public mural, which will be going on the north wall at Town & Country Lanes. The wall was recently primed and directs those interested to the city website (www.keizer.org) for more information.

The mural, a project being led by Keizer Public Arts Commission member Jill Hagen, got a boost Dec. 2 as Hagen held a meeting with interested artists. About 25 people attended. The next meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, Jan. 6 at 6 p.m. at Keizer Civic Center, 930 Chemawa Road NE.

Lore Christopher, the KPAC chair, gave a brief introduction of the committee and thanked Don Lebold, the Town & Country owner who was in attendance.

"Don graciously gave us the side of his building," Christopher said. "I wanted the mural to be reflective of the community."

Actual work at the building is expected to start in May, but pre-work will be done long before that.

"We're not going to wait until May," Hagen said. "We're going to start now."

Hagen introduced several of the artists who have pledged to help with the mural and to help community members with their painting.

"This group has tremendous assets and abilities," Hagen said. "This is our group we can turn to for help. You don't have to be a skilled artist to do what we're doing."

According to Hagen, a healthy public art program is a good sign.

"That's the first indicator your community is doing well," she said. "Art helps us feel better. There's no end to what the benefit of having artwork is."

Hagen noted the wall being used is 140 feet long, with painting to be done in stages. Sherwin-Williams will be providing all of the paint and supplies. Grid work will be done to give an idea how images will be transferred onto the wall, to be followed by projection work. The bricks along the wall will help with the gridding.

"This thing is for amateurs and professionals, young and old, skilled and non-skilled," Hagen said.

Artists won't necessarily be doing an entire piece.

"Say you've been working on something for 30 minutes," Hagen said. "Then you'll put down your stuff, move down one space and work on the next one. That way your uniqueness gets spread around."

After the sky is painted, buildings and trees will be painted, followed by Iris Festival Parade images and parade spectators. Images by children will be done last.

"We're going to get lots of kids to put their hands up there," Hagen said. "We're looking for someone to work with the children."

Parade images include the pet parade, McNary High School band, the Keizer Fire District's antique truck, the Town & Country float, a police car, color guard, a couple of small cars, a juggler, an antique car, rodeo horses, Native Americans, the Volcanoes float, Keizer CERT, Mexican horses and a clown.

"Faces will all be flesh colored," Hagen said. "We are going to be selling portraits to the community for $200. We won't have Hitler or anyone awful."

Several of the images were not selected by artists attending last week's meeting including CERT (Community Emergency Response Team), the Volcanoes float, the KFD fire truck, the clown, the marching band and small cars.

Wendy Lusby was among those pledging to help community members.

"I would be willing to help some people if they need it," Lusby said. "There will be people working on this that may need instruction. I would be willing to help. Not everyone working on this has to be an artist by any means."

Parks Board amends master plans

By CRAIG MURPHY
Of the Keizertimes

The master plan for Keizer Rapids Park has been revised yet again.

This time, however, neither the changes nor the process were as intensive.

Members of the Keizer Parks and Recreation Advisory Board approved relatively minor changes Tuesday to the KRP master plan, as well as the Chalmers Jones Park behind the Keizer Civic Center. The revisions will be forwarded to the Keizer City Council for final approval.

This marks the second year in a row the master plan for KRP has been revised, but the work was much easier and quicker this time.

Last year, the master plan had to be amended as part of moving the desired location for the Big Toy play structure, which was built in June. Since the process included land not inside city limits, that issue had to be dealt with. In addition, a number of meetings were held to determine what amenities the park should have in the future.

By comparison, the changes looked at Tuesday were minor. Access along the east side of the park and a proposed ADA (Americans with Disabilities Act) pathway were added to the master plan. City officials, at the request of the Community Build Task Force, will be applying for a grant to complete final projects — the pathway, restrooms and a poured-in-place surface — at the Big Toy next year. An ADA pathway was added in part since adding disability access should make the project more attractive in grant applications.

Bill Lawyer, the Public Works director who is working with Community Development director Nate Brown on the application being submitted to the Oregon Parks and Recreation Department, explained the master plan update to Parks Board members on Tuesday.

"We got to talking about access, pathways and grant applications," Lawyer said. "There should have been a path there all along. There is no way for neighbors to get there without taking a long path. This also means there is a path to the Big Toy without having to go down Walsh Way. The best correction would be to create this east-west pathway."

Parks Board chair David Loudon asked what kind of timeline is being looked at for the pathway.

"With an aggressive schedule we could have it built this next summer," Lawyer responded. "If it's included and approved for the grant, we could make that happen next summer. If not, it will be at least a year delayed. I'm figuring we'll be taking out two rows of trees in the orchards, but I haven't counted how many trees that is. It's close to how many we took out for the Big Toy."

With Chalmers Jones Park, the master plan has needed altering for years since the current plan was from before city hall opened in 2009 and the layout is slightly different than the plan shows.

"It's something we've known we've needed for a while," Lawyer said. "We decided to not include it with the last master plan update for Keizer Rapids because we didn't want to mud up the topic then. Since we're bringing this (KRP) update up, we figured it was time to make it consistent with the civic center. The border of the park doesn't match what is there;

the border in the plan goes through the middle of Splash Fountain."

Parks Board members unanimously approved both master plan changes.
