he has an extensive criminal history," Kuhns said last week.

Kuhns also noted Madrid and Anderson weren't strangers.

"Investigators have established the suspect and victim knew each other prior to the shooting," Kuhns said at the time. "There is no reason to believe this was a strangerto-stranger encounter."

Neither man is a stranger to criminal activity either, according to court records.

The Keizertimes looked through Anderson's history last week and found he was arrested in 1986 for theft in Polk County and was also indicted for manufacturing and delivery of a controlled substance. There were also possession of controlled substance charges from the same time period.

Court records also show two unauthorized use of vehicle charges for Anderson in Linn County in 1988, plus multiple counts of manufacturing, delivery and possession of controlled substance charges in Marion County in 1994. There were charges of speeding (1996) and following too closely (1998) before possession of marijuana methamphetamine and charges in Marion County in 2009.

Madrid's legal troubles started with a minor in possession of alcohol charge in 2003. His first drug charge was for methamphetamine in 2006, followed by methamphetamine and marijuana charges in 2008, delivery and manufacturing of drugs in 2011 and possession and delivery of methamphetamine in 2013.

According to a police affidavit or probable cause statement since sealed, the Statesman Journal reported last week Anderson had given Madrid $1,400 to purchase methamphetamine. When that didn't happen, Anderson went to Bi-Mart after being told Madrid was there. According to the affidavit, Madrid opened the front passenger door of the sport utility vehicle he was in and shot Anderson once. The revolver used in the shooting was visible on the ground next to the vehicle after the HOMELESS: 'This problem can't wait another year.'

(Continued from pg. A1) with that," Reeves said, "We need to vet it out more specifically. Maybe we can look at how to get groups together, maybe community partners or members interested in getting engaged, maybe those who have experienced homelessness or are currently homeless. It's important to hear about the experience of going through that or have gone through that."

Shaney Starr, director of Strategic Initiatives for Dick Withnell, echoed Reeves.

"I want us as a task force to know who is doing what and what is happening, like an asset map," Starr said. "If we're not talking to the different groups, we're not able to work in harmony and in cohesive fashion. We need to bring those people to the table. Maybe we need to have more meetings. We need to have open minds and support each other and try new things. If it fails, that's okay. I'm asking for community support and positive encouragement."

The sense of urgency was also heard during public comments at the end of the meet-

Rob Cantrall, founder of Postcards From the Street and a chronically homeless pastor, said the start is simple.

"To take the first step, remember to house the homeless," Cantrall said. "The other things and services we can get. Get the housing first. In Utah they got rid of the homeless because they just gave them a place. That got rid of a big chunk of the problem there. You can't give someone a home tomorrow if they can't survive tonight. Like Shaney said, we need to take action."

Lori Walker, a retired state hospital employee, also noted the lack of homeless experience on the task force.

"We have a problem now," Walker said. "This problem can't wait another year. There is no homeless person like (Cantrall) on the panel. This is what we're dealing with. You're not hearing from this population."

Starr said afterwards she wants new ideas explored, instead of automatically being

"I don't want to hear why we can't try something, I want to hear that we should try it," she said. "I want to hear the voice of someone who is homeless, so we can hear their struggles. And I want to hear from people who are no longer homeless and find out what helped them and what would they find most useful. A majority of these people want a hand up, not a hand out."

Cantrall is willing to help out in any way possible.

"I'm hoping I can lend my experience at being homeless," he said. "They talked about building things in the next year, but tonight I'll be on the street."
